Priority Setting And Strategic Sourcing In The Naval Research Development And Technology Infrastructure:

Priority-Setting and Strategic Sourcing in the Naval Research, Development, and Technology Infrastructure, 1995 Many responsible elements of the Department of Defense DoD Congress and the defense industry have expressed concern that the DoD in downsizing and restructuring in recent years is not cutting back on infrastructure or non combat elements to a degree that is appropriate for the extent it is drawing down the combat force structure Separately proponents of the acquisition reform that is now under way question the need for DoD s maintaining as much infrastructure in house as it has Infrastructural elements are thus expected to get a more critical look in further rounds of budget cutting The Department of the Navy DON is undertaking such a critical examination both to make appropriate preparations for the 1995 round of Base Realignment and Closure BRAC and to meet its need to make the best use of its resources for the longer term In its examination DON has divided its infrastructure into two parts One part comprises research development and technology RD the other part comprises engineering production and support EP S The purpose of this study is to offer analysis that will aid DON in its review of its RD T infrastructure More specifically we present a framework for setting priorities for funding different lines of RD T and we offer our best application of that framework Part I we discuss ways in which the Navy might increase the efficiency and effectiveness of its RD T investments mostly through flexible insourcing and outsourcing strategies which are sometimes collectively referred to as smart buying or strategic sourcing We use the term strategic sourcing Part II Priority-setting and Strategic Sourcing in the Naval Research, Development, and Technology Infrastructure Kenneth V.
