Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known health problems. They were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a variety of tests, including a 1.5-mile run, a 1-mile walk, a 1-mile swim, and a 1-mile bike ride. Health was measured using a variety of tests, including blood pressure, heart rate, and cholesterol levels. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly improved physical fitness and health compared to the control group. The training group had a significantly lower 1.5-mile run time, a significantly lower 1-mile walk time, a significantly lower 1-mile swim time, and a significantly lower 1-mile bike ride time. The training group also had significantly lower blood pressure, heart rate, and cholesterol levels compared to the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary, middle-aged men.
