

COMPARATIVE POLITICS: NATURE AND MAJOR APPROACHES

Comparative politics is the study and appraisal of domestic politics across countries. Comparative politics has a long and very ancient history starting back just before the origin of systematic political studies in ancient Greece and Rome. Even ancient people compared their situations with those of other people's with whom they came in contact. The ancient Greeks performed the earliest systematic comparisons of a more modern and varied.

Comparative politics is key area in political sciences, popularised by an empirical approach based on the comparative method. To put it in another way, comparative politics is the study of the domestic politics, political institutions, and conflicts of countries. It often encompasses comparisons across countries and through time within single countries, emphasising major patterns of similarity and difference. Many political theorists like Aristot Lijphart argued that comparative politics does not have a functional form or method, instead a methodological one (Lijphart, 1977). In simple terms, comparative politics is not defined by the subject of its study, but by the method it applies to study political phenomena. Peter Hall and Richard Hall gave notable definition of comparative politics and stated that comparative politics is characterised by a combination of a substantive focus on the study of countries' political systems and a method of recognising and explaining similarities and differences between these countries using consistent models (Petra, 1996).

In the field of Comparative politics, the term politics has three connotations such as political activities, political process and political power. Political activity consists of the efforts by which the maintenance of conflicts are created and resolved in a way pertaining to the interest of people as far as possible rather than to their quest to struggle for power. Political process is an expression of political activity. Political power is the major topic in comparative politics. The term power has been defined by different writers. Friedrich identified power as a certain kind of human relationship. Whereas Tarrow explained power as a capacity of an individual or group of individuals to modify the conduct of other individuals in a certain which he defines (C. Tarrow, 1992).

When applied to particular fields of study, comparative politics denotes by other names, such as comparative government (the comparative study of forms of government) or comparative foreign policy (comparing the foreign policies of different states in order to establish general empirical connections between the characteristics of the state and the characteristics of its foreign policy).

Many theories articulated that "Comparative political science" as a general term for an area of study, as opposed to a methodology of study, can be seen as redundant. The political study shows as political system often as report or fact comparison is being made.

The Politics of Human Nature Thomas Fleming, 1988-01-01 The effort to understand human nature in a political context is a daunting challenge that has been undertaken in a variety of ways and by a myriad of disciplines through the ages From Plato to Hobbes and Burke to Wallas and Oakeschott in our era efforts have been made to provide some organic framework for the political study of mankind What has added greatly to the complexity of the task is the increasing denial even rejection in the positivist and behaviorist traditions of the very notion of a human nature The work can be described as a series of interlocking propositions the proverbial view of human nature can be explained by evolutionary theory Biological differences between men and women are responsible for family community and group life Social evolution goes through stages which are recapitulated in the moral life of individuals A well defined federal system mirrors human development And finally for Fleming most problems in social and political life stem from violations of this federalist system Fleming s volume takes up a variety of issues sex and gender differences democracy and dictatorship individual and familial patterns of association He does so in the context of showing how forms of legitimate authority such as families communities and nations establish such authority by appeals to human nature and that these appeals while presumably resting on empirical evidence also confirm the existence of normative structures Fleming s work is an effort of synthesis that is sure to arouse discussion and debate It represents a serious addition to a literature retrieved from the historical dustbins to which it has been repeatedly consigned

LaRocco, 2024-04-16 This case study of Botswana focuses on the state building qualities of biodiversity conservation in southern Africa Drawing on extensive fieldwork Annette A LaRocco argues that discourses and practices related to biodiversity conservation are essential to state building in the postcolonial era These discourses and practices invoke the ways the state exerts authority over people places and resources enacts and remakes territorial control crafts notions of ideal citizenship and identity and structures economic relationships at the local national and global levels The book's key innovation is its conceptualization of the conservation estate a term most often used as an apolitical descriptor denoting land set aside for the purpose of conservation LaRocco argues that this description is inadequate and proposes a novel and much needed alternative definition that is tied to its political elements The components of conservation control over land policing of human behavior and structuring of the authority that allows or disallows certain subjectivities render conservation a political phenomenon that can be analyzed separately from considerations of nature or wildlife In doing so it addresses a gap in the scholarship of rural African politics which focuses overwhelmingly on productive agrarian dynamics and often fails to recognize that land nonuse can be as politically significant and wide reaching as land use Botswana is an ideal empirical case study upon which to base these theoretical claims With 39 percent of its land set aside for conservation Botswana is home to large populations of wildlife particularly charismatic megafauna such as the largest herd of elephants on the continent Utilizing more than two hundred interviews participant observation and document analysis this book examines a series of conservation policies and their reception by people living on the conservation estate These phenomena include securitized antipoaching enforcement a national hunting ban 2014 19 restrictions on using wildlife products forced evictions from conservation areas limitations on mobility and freedom of movement the political economy of Botswana's wildlife tourism industry and the conservation of globally important charismatic megafauna species Environmental Politics for a Changing World Ronnie D. Lipschutz, Doreen Stabinsky, 2018-07-12 This book argues that environmental problems are first and foremost political and therefore about power Using a framework of political economy and political ecology the authors deconstruct current environmental problems to identify root causes and address those problems through mobilization of collective action and social power The second edition also offers Updated examples and stories of political struggles and the actors involved Explicit attention to various forms of power in environmental politics including structural and social power Local politics and collective action as related to global environmental politics Discussion of emerging issues such as synthetic biology commodification and financialization of nature including carbon markets and geoengineering
