

- The Department of Labor would establish national target group priorities, but local officials would be able to adapt these to their unique local population and problems;
- There would be an application and approval process through which state and local officials would establish their performance objectives and make public their plans and progress;
- Coordination with other separately legislated manpower activities, such as the Work Incentive Program (WIN) and the employment service, would be encouraged.

I indicated to the Committee that these basic principles were now being embodied in proposed regulations and guidelines, that they were entirely consistent with the legal requirements of the MDTA and the EOA, and that we intended to move in a controlled and phased fashion to implement this program, working through state and local officials.

My testimony praised S1559 in general but outlined some of the specific problems that we saw in the legislation, such as the continuation of a number of categorical programs and the inclusion of specific funding for community action agencies.

In the ensuing questioning by the Committee, Senators Nelson and Javits stated their positions on several important issues that, in retrospect, were important portents of their actions over the coming months. In responding to my criticism of the Committee bill for being overly categorized, Senator Nelson first emphasized his 15-year commitment to returning responsibility for manpower programs to state governments:

...we ought to return to the state and local governments every single function performed by the federal government that can, in fact, be performed effectively at the local level.

It is an administrative bureaucratic monstrosity down here in Washington and we just do more damage to the country through the bureaucracy than you would have as a consequence of the various varieties of incompetence or corruption that you will, from time to time, find in the state and cities.

and then stated his view of categorization: that the bill already named a category, "poor people," so all the Committee was asking for was a program that also took into

Politics Of Comprehensive Manpower Legislation:

The Politics of Comprehensive Manpower Legislation Roger H. Davidson, 1972 The Changing Politics of Federal Grants Lawrence D. Brown, James W. Fossett, Kenneth T. Palmer, 2011-12-01

The design and use of federal grants in aid to state and local governments have posed policy choices for every presidential administration since that of Lyndon B Johnson. The papers in this volume describe the decisions these administrations have made, analyze why only some of these choices prevailed politically, and explain how large amounts of federal aid have affected local governments. These studies mark the final chapter in a major research effort carried out by the Brookings Governmental Studies program to evaluate the effects of general revenue sharing and other broad-based forms of aid that were introduced in the early 1970s. Kenneth T Palmer traces the major steps in the evolution of grants in aid since the Johnson administration. Lawrence D Brown's essay on the politics of devolution examines the successes and failures of innovative grant policies such as revenue sharing and block grants. James W Fossett, writing on the politics of dependence, analyzes the effect of the massive expansion of federal grants to the large cities in the 1970s.

The Political Failure of Employment Policy, 1945-1982 Gary Mucciaroni, 2023-10-31

This political history analyzes the failure of the United States to adopt viable employment policies. It follows U.S. manpower training and employment policy from the 1946 Employment Act to the Job Training Partnership Act of 1982. Between these two landmarks of legislation in the War on Poverty were attempts to create public service employment (PSE): the abortive Humphrey Hawkins Act and the beleaguered Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). Mucciaroni traces the impact of economic ideas and opinions on federal employment policy. Efforts at reform, he believes, are frustrated by the tension between economic liberty and social equality that restricts the role of government and holds workers themselves accountable for success or failure. Professional economists, especially Keynesians, have shaped the content and timing of policy innovations in such ways as to limit employment programs to a social welfare mission rather than broader positive economic objectives. As a result, neither labor nor management has been centrally involved in making policy, and employment programs have lacked a stable and organized constituency committed to their success. Finally, because of the fragmentation of U.S. political institutions, employment programs are not integrated with economic policy, are hampered by conflicting objectives, and are difficult to carry out effectively. As chronic unemployment and the United States' difficulties in the world marketplace continue to demand attention, the importance of Mucciaroni's subject will grow. For political scientists, economists, journalists, and activists, this book will be a rich resource in the ongoing debate about the deficiencies of liberalism and the best means of addressing one of the nation's most pressing social and political problems. Mucciaroni's provocative theoretical analysis is buttressed by several years' research at the U.S. Department of Labor, access to congressional hearings, reports, and debates, and interviews with policy makers and their staffs. It will interest all concerned with the history of liberal social policy in the postwar period.
