Stephen Smith, with two bookshelves high in American influences, printed such statements early in his career that he was a "self-styled internationalist" (Smith, p. 10). And in the early 1950s, Smith wrote the story of his "European" house and home.

But even in an age of mass media, it was of great interest to many of the American citizens, especially in the post-World War II period, to learn of the lives of the American expatriates in Europe.
