

Methods of Fabric Printing

Screen Printing

Screen printers utilize either flat screens or a rotating cylindrical screen to stamp designs onto the fabric with various colors of ink. Each color used in the design requires its own screen.

pros

- can produce large quantities quickly
- produces vibrant colors
- can be used on a wide variety of fabric types

cons

- not practical for small quantities
- resource intensive (each color requires a screen)
- uses excess water, ink, and chemicals
- most inks and chemicals used are harmful to humans and the environment

Reactive Dye Digital

Reactive dye and acid dye digital printing utilizes digital ink-jet style printers to print designs on fabric. A reactive coating is applied to the fabrics, creating a reaction that helps the dyes bond to the fabric. This process requires the printer, a steaming unit, a washer unit, and a drying oven.

pros

- able to produce vibrant color
- works well on a wide variety of natural fiber fabrics

cons

- complex process that requires multiple machines
- inconsistent results from one run to the next
- can be harmful to the environment

Dye Sublimation Digital

Designs are first printed onto a special transfer paper using a sublimation ink. The design is then transferred onto the fabric from the paper using heat and pressure to bond the ink to the fabric.

- simple process with low-cost options
- high-detailed quality prints
- allows for quick turnaround times
- consistent colors between print runs

cons

- only works on synthetic fabrics
- requires ongoing disposal of transfer paper

Digital Pigment

This method applies ink directly to the fabric using precision print heads. After the ink is applied, the fabric passes through a heat press/oven that sets the color onto the fabric.

- eco-friendly printing with options for organic inks and no waste
- highly consistent and repeatable
- enables small print runs and fast turnaround times
- amazing color fastness
- works with most fabric types

cons

- older methods can have washing and cracking issues
- quality printers are significant investment
