

SINGING FOR BEGINNERS

Warm-Up

1

It's important to warm up your voice before singing, whether you're practicing or performing. Warming up your voice will cause your voice reduce the chances of damaging it.

2

Record Yourself & Listen Back

There is a difference in how you hear your singing and how others hear it. Filming yourself singing is definitely worth it; analyze your performance and hear where you're making mistakes will help you improve.

3

Improve Your Intonation

Strengthen your pitch-matching by doing aural drills. Start by playing a note, sing along and then slide your pitch one way, and then back to the note. You'll start training your ear to really hear the varying pitches.

4

Get Comfortable

Get comfortable while you are singing. Avoid tensing up and straining your voice. Pick a song that's in your range, and only use techniques you're familiar and comfortable with.

5

Drink Lots Of Water

All professional singers recommend drinking a lot of water - usually at least eight glasses per day. Drinking water helps you bring vibration and modulation to your voice.

Technique Is King / Queen!

To sing for extended lengths of time, it is necessary that you control your breathing the right way. Start with some basic breathing exercises that can help you learn the different pitches.

Listen To Others

As you listen to more vocalists, you'll notice that there are many differences in style, voice quality and techniques. Listening to many singers may help you identify which genre of music your voice is suited to.

Work Out Your Vocal Range

Instead of trying only to mimic the greats, it's important to work with a vocal teacher to understand your own personal range and keep it in consideration as you're warming up and selecting repertoire.

Sing Songs You Enjoy

Singing isn't always about the exercises and exam pieces that you need to practice for your lessons. It should also be about fun and enjoyment. So always sing a song that you enjoy.

Use These Tips & Tricks

This list of singing tips and tricks will be helpful forevermore. Learning how to sing is a lifelong skill that you can acquire. So remember to print off this list of top 10 tips, and refer back to it regularly.
