

Writing Program Learning Outcomes

Programs and their Courses

Program learning outcomes are the central organising feature of student learning. They are developed from the complex interaction of a range of competing and complementary factors. Since program learning outcomes can only be achieved and demonstrated through component courses, course learning outcomes and their assessment are integrally related to program learning outcomes.

Although program learning outcomes are written primarily for enrolled and prospective students, it is important to take into account that they are used in various ways by a number of different stakeholders including accrediting and regulating bodies, employers and industry groups, and quality assurance agencies such as Tertiary Education Quality Standards Agency (TEQSA). A comprehensive range of good program learning outcomes can be found in the course (program) descriptions on the Open University website.

Features of Program Learning Outcomes

Program learning outcomes are the blueprint for the design and development of an award through its component courses.

As indicated in Figure 1, program learning outcomes are shaped by the:

- essential knowledge, skills, and the application of that knowledge and skills of the appropriate qualification descriptors of the Australian Qualifications Framework \(AQF\)
- University's strategic goals and priorities, including Graduate Attributes
- requirements of the discipline through threshold learning outcomes or other subject statements
- relevant stakeholder standards and expectations including professional and industry associations, employers, workforce planning and priorities standards for professional accreditation, where applicable.
