Music Education and the Art of Performance in the German Baroque John Butt, 1994-05-26 In considering the role of practical music in education this book explores the art of performance in Germany during the Baroque period The author examines the large number of surviving treatises and instruction manuals used in the Lutheran schools during the period 1530 1800 and builds up a picture of the function and status of music in both school and church This understanding of music as a functional art musica practica in turn gives us insight into contemporary performance of the sacred work of Praetorius Sch tz Buxtehude or Bach

Androids in the Enlightenment Adelheid Voskuhl, 2013-05-31 The eighteenth century saw the creation of a number of remarkable mechanical androids at least ten prominent automata were built between 1735 and 1810 by clockmakers court mechanics and other artisans from France Switzerland Austria and the German lands Designed to perform sophisticated activities such as writing drawing or music making these Enlightenment automata have attracted continuous critical attention from the time they were made to the present often as harbingers of the modern industrial age an era during which human bodies and souls supposedly became mechanized In Androids in the Enlightenment Adelheid Voskuhl investigates two such automata both depicting piano playing women These automata not only play music but also move their heads eyes and torsos to mimic a sentimental body technique of the eighteenth century musicians were expected to generate sentiments in themselves while playing then communicate them to the audience through bodily motions Voskuhl argues contrary to much of the subsequent scholarly conversation that these automata were unique masterpieces that illustrated the sentimental culture of a civil society rather than expressions of anxiety about the mechanization of humans by industrial technology She demonstrates that only in a later age of industrial factory production did mechanical androids instill the fear that modern selves and societies had become indistinguishable from machines
