Early Operations of the Burmese War Henry Lister Maw,2017-05-27 Excerpt from Memoir of the Early Operations of the Burmese War Addressed to the Editor of the United Service Journal On its publication remarks were made by various persons and angry complaints by the navy I for one spoke to Colonel Snodgrass on the subject and his answer was That his work was a journal of Sir Archibald Campbell s army that he did not understand naval tactics and that he thought some naval man had better publish an account of their proceedings adding however that the naval force employed was comparatively small and you know that at one time you were the only naval officer doing duty at Rangoon This was all well and true on the part of the Colonel but the public having read and approved his work it was scarcely probable that they would read and approve all or any of the nine hundred and ninety nine accounts that might follow it and consequently the naval man whoever he might be that should undertake the task would have an additional difficulty to overcome to obtain a hearing About the Publisher
