Zerrihfi,2010-11-08 For those in developed nations suddenly being without electricity is a disaster power cuts have us fretting over the food stored in the freezer and even a few hours without lights, televisions or air conditioning is an ordeal. However, for an estimated 1.6 billion people worldwide, the absence of electricity is their daily experience. An untold number of others live with electricity that is erratic and of poor quality. How can electric power be brought into their lives when the centralized utility models that have evolved in developed nations are not an economically viable option? Poor rural communities in developing nations cannot simply be plugged in to a grid. Small scale Distributed Generation (DG) ranging from individual solar home systems to village level grids run off diesel generators could provide the answer and this book compares around 20 DG enterprises and projects in Brazil, Cambodia and China, each of which is considered to be a business model for distributed rural electrification. While large centralized power projects often rely on big subsidies, this study shows that privately run and localized solutions can be both self-sustaining and replicable. Its three sections provide a general introduction to the issue of electrification and rural development, set out the details of the case studies and compare the models involved and discuss the important thematic issues of equity, access to capital and cost recovery. Hisham Zerriffi shows that in each case it is not simply a matter of matching a particular technology to a particular need. Numerous institutional factors come into play, including the regulatory regime, access to financial services and government utility support or opposition to the DG alternative. Despite this, in many countries the question is not whether DG has a role to play. Rather, it is a question of how it will play a role.

Alternative Development Strategies in Sub-Saharan Africa Frances Stewart, Sanjaya Lall, Samuel M. Wangwe, 1992-06-18. The World Bank and the IMF dominate policy making in Africa today. The Global Greenhouse Regime Kirk R. Smith, 2013-12-16. Effective policies to prevent global warming and climatic change are urgently required by the world community. However, international negotiations on this issue repeatedly come up against the problems of allocating responsibility for the greenhouse effect and bearing the costs of remedying the situation. This volume offers a multidisciplinary response to the challenge. It presents the scientific, economic and political issues and goes on to describe the policy options available. The different ways of determining responsibility for greenhouse gases and calculating obligations to pay for hazards to the environment are analyzed. The contributors examine the implications for various countries while a concluding chapter explores climatic change negotiations: what is at stake and for whom.

Bridging the Global Digital Divide Jeffrey James, 2003-01-01. According to many observers, the global digital divide, the extent to which information technology is benefiting developed as opposed to developing countries, has already established itself as the single most pervasive theme of the twenty-first century. The purpose of this book is to explore some of the ways in which this divide can be overcome both within and between nations. Employing a rigorous analytical framework, the author bases his analysis on the concept of international technological dualism. He argues that one possible solution to the problem is the availability of affordable technologies such as low cost computers which are specifically designed for the income levels and socio economic conditions of developing countries He also emphasizes that the most important aim of any policy measure should be to provide universal access to information technologies rather than individual ownership Depending on whether or not this divide can be bridged will to a large degree determine whether developing countries are able to attain higher levels of productivity prosperity and global integration
