Policy Making in an Era of Global Environmental Change R. E. Munn, J. W. M. la Rivière, N. van Lookeren Campagne, 2012-12-06 Major international interdisciplinary research programmes are now underway to increase our understanding of how the Earth System operates and how it is changing through the effects of human activities Although understanding and predictive capacity are still limited scientists already agree that significant global changes must be expected in the next 50 years that will affect the capacity of the Earth to sustain life Governments business and industry have therefore come to recognize that scientific knowledge about the changing global environment as yet incomplete but rapidly evolving is becoming indispensable for wise long term policy making the goal being to design preventive adaptive and remedial measures Thus global change science and policy making are engaged in a process of forming a new partnership that is taking shape as further insights evolve Effective continuous interactions between the partners requires mutual understanding decision makers need to understand the unique potential but also the limitations of the results of scientific research in progress while scientists must take into account the priorities and constraints of policy makers in designing and implementing policies that will promote long term sustainability of life on this planet This book contributes in a unique manner to this mutual understanding It gives an overview of the ongoing relevant research focusing on the two major international programmes the International Geosphere Biosphere Programme and the World Climate Research Programme These are described in terms understandable to the interested lay reader The results of the latest review of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change IPCC are included This is followed by an analysis of the response process that is in progress with respect to governments singly and multilaterally by business and industry and by public interest groups This process is leading to interactive structures assessment procedures and legislation nationally and internationally Business and industry are changing from mere watchfulness to recognition of new opportunities for products and processes Six interviews with prominent figures from business and government circles in the Netherlands provide a vivid illustration of the questions at issue The appendices provide overviews of methods for incorporating the results of global change science into policy making and development of long lasting projects Adaptation to climate change serves as an example Thus for the first time one book describes both ongoing research work in global change and the response processes that the research results are evoking It is of interest to all stake holders in the scientific community as well as to decision makers in industry business and government

Decision Making for Complex Socio-Technical Systems Thomas Flüeler, 2006-03-08 Waste management can be considered as a mirror of society In its our fluctuating definition besides conserving a supply of valuable materials and resources it acts as a fascinating expression for our throw away mentality Waste is inevitable but it nevertheless provides an opportunity a need and an incentive for society to pursue a more careful management of it If this is successfully carried out society may well find it possible to manage itself in an overall more careful and universal way The management or governance of radioactive waste particularly is determined by a complex constellation of individuals social aggregates and institutions A wealth of interconnected parts forms a complex and volatile system that is highly technical and explosively political in nature The problems inherent in this system must be managed so as to reach a safe acceptable responsible feasible and sustainable solution It is a system with an objective long term dimension with a hazard potential of in part hundreds of thousands of years and it has a long term institutional dimension insofar as its implementation must last for decades The very notion of risk extends from the long life of radionuclides over the perception of dread to the decisional risk of whether when and how to implement an agreed upon solution

The Handbook of Environmental Voluntary Agreements Edoardo Croci, 2005-10-06 EDOARDO CROCI IEF E Universit Bocconi Milano Italy Voluntary approaches in environmental policy represent a third wave of regulation in the environmental field Command and control was the first wave Its core is based on uniform emission standards the respect of which needs to be enforced through extensive monitoring and severe sanctions The expected cost of sanction for non compliance calculated as its amount multiplied for the probability to be caught must be superior to the benefits of non compliance in order to let the sanction be effective As the benefits of non compliance can vary among firms sanctions need to be very high in order to be effective In fact sanctions are ordinary correlated to environmental damage and not to the benefits of non compliance But very high sanctions can be difficult to enforce as they appear unfair and can lead to dramatic consequences on firms and workers up to shut downs of plants Ambient standards reduce these problems but oblige the regulator to know a huge amount of information regarding the specific contribution of each polluter to the polluted body Information is difficult to obtain because of asymmetric information and costly to produce because it requires large and skilled regulating and enforcing organizations Nevertheless complex regulation is the base of any environmental policy framework as it allows the policy maker to fully exercise its power of composition of various interests in a relatively transparent way Economic instruments were the second wave

Institutional Dynamics in Environmental Governance Bas Arts, Pieter Leroy, 2006-09-09 Environmental policy in its broadest context has been significantly revitalized and renewed during the last two decades That observation is nothing new attested to by the number of publications conferences and both private and public projects that have been initiated However our understanding of the dynamics of this renewal has generally been informed by studies on single policies and projects leaving us with a limited understanding of what the newness consists of in terms of an integrated perspective This book presents fresh analyses of a number of well known cases but does so from one comprehensive view the so called policy arrangement approach Cases discussed range over organic farming integrated water management nature policy cultural heritage policy integrated region oriented policy corporate environmental management and target group policy always in search of the commonality of experience and conclusions to be drawn in understanding the past and in formulating future perspectives
