The Political Economy of Urban Land Reform in Hawaii

Summer J. La Croix, James Mak and Louis A. Rose

[Paper Best received, May 1994; in Book Serve, September 1994]

Summary. In the mid 1960s there were about 22 000 single-family leasehold homes in Honolulu. Dissatisfaction with leasehold led to reform legislation in 1967, allowing leasees to buy leased land. By 1991 less than 5000 lessees remained. This paper examines why landowners elected to lease rather than sell land and attributes the rise of leasehold to legal constraints on land sales by large estates, duties of estate trustees and the federal tax code. Ideological forces initiated land reform in 1967, but rent-seeking forces captured the process in the mid 1970s. It is concluded that Hawaii's experiment with leasehold was a failure due to the difficulties associated with specifying and enforcing long-term contracts in residential land.

A man is not whole and complete Unless he owns a house and the ground it stands on.

(Walt Whitman)

In many parts of the world, residents own their homes and lease the land on which their homes are built. Residential land leasing is practised in Great Britain, Israel, Hong Kong, Singapore, New Delhi, Canberra, Am-Stockho him sterdam. Winnesparver (Canada). In most cases, a municipal government leases publicly-owned land to residents in a competitive land market (MacDonald, 1969). In the UK, the Church of England owns large tracts of land which it leases to home-owners. Residential land leasing is also widely practised in many Pacific island countries where land cannot be sold to nonnatives.1

Residential land leasing in the US is relatively uncommon. There are pockets of residential leaseholds in Maryland, south-eastern Pennsylvania and California. The largest of these developments is in Irvine, California, where, in the 1960s, the Irvine Company developed several leasehold communities (Nakamura, 1989). There are also small pockets of leasehold homes on Indian reservations and other federal lands across the US. However, residential land leasing has been widely practised only in the State of Hawaii, and in particular on the island of Onhu which is co-terminous with the City and County of Honolulu (hereafter referred to as Honolulu). Residential leaseholds did not become a major factor in Honolulu until after World War IL2 In 1940, there were fewer than 500 leases to owners of singlefamily homes, but by 1967 single-family homes on leased land comprised about 26 per cent of the total stock of single-family homes (see Vargha, 1964, for pre-war data, and Economics Research Associates, 1969, for post-war data). The ownership of these leases was highly concentrated. In 1963 a
