

building. In short, these include: (1) the presence of a 'clear development strategy'; (2) the capability to import technology ('branch-plants are better than no plants'); (3) the presence of 'synergy' between players; (4) the presence of 'long-term vision' to develop the region; (5) the identification of 'sources of innovation'; (6) the early establishment of networks ('mechanisms and channels for information to flow'); (7) appropriate distances of regions from core industrial centres; (8) the need for selectivity in 'longer-distance strategies' (that is, it may be necessary to focus on more appropriate areas that suit technopole development rather than use a 'scatter-shot strategy' that is politically acceptable but 'fails to build up momentum anywhere'); (9) 'major central inducements' (government funding); (10) capacity to 'identify new niches' (that is, a region is able to penetrate and capitalise on niche markets); (11) the presence of 'protective mechanisms' that will 'insulate the project, for a long period, against premature accusations of failure'; and finally (12) recognition that evaluation of regional development according to the 'most rigorous exclusive criteria' may overlook the possibility of other 'useful fall-out effects' (pp. 248–50).

The authors outline their intent in the opening paragraphs of their work as a desire 'to bring together in one descriptive-analytic account, the most important ventures in constructing technopoles worldwide' (p. 2). In the main, they follow truly to their course, and although some may consider the work more descriptive than analytical there are valuable insights to be gleaned from the work. The authors handle the multi-disciplinary nature of their topic well, moving between economics, history, sociology, planning, business and geography with commendable adroitness. They explore weighty contemporary issues and do well to illuminate an area often subject to considerable verbiage but little enlightenment. Overall, the work is an important, readable and valuable contribution to the literature on high technology and regional development. It is well worth examining if the reader's interests lie in this direction.

The Political Economy of Communication: Rethinking and Renewal

Vincent Mosco

London, Sage, 1996, x + 307 pp., AU$38.95, ISBN 0-8039-8561-4

The book is dedicated to students and so it is not unreasonable for students to ask: 'what does political economy have to do with communication?' In this book, Mosco responds to the question by offering a guide to political economy and how it can be used to study the media and communication.¹

From classical to postmodern theorists, Mosco takes on 'an inclusive, open, and non-reductionist perspective' into the study of the political economy of communication. While touching on various theoretical viewpoints, Mosco, nonetheless, provides some practical applications of the field.

The book is divided into two parts. In Part I, Mosco maps the political economy of communication and adopts a 'historical, descriptive and critical' approach. He starts off with the question 'What is Political Economy?' and defines it in terms of power relations between the production, distribution and consumption of resources. He proceeds on with a discussion of its central characteristics—social change and history, social totality, moral interrogates the intertwining of the local and the digital in environmental communication. It starts by introducing a wave metaphor to tease out major shifts in the field and situates the intersections of local places and digital networks in the beginning of a third wave. Investigations that feature the centrality of place and digital communication platforms show how we today as researchers and practitioners communicate the environment. Contributions identify the need for critical approaches that engage with the wider consequences of this changing media landscape, unpacking local and global tensions in environmental communication research. This empirical case study collection from different parts of the world shows that environmental activists and citizens creatively use digital technologies for campaign purposes. It identifies new environmental communication challenges and opportunities as well as practices of environmental activists, NGOs, citizens and local communities in the fight for social and environmental justice.

Political Economy of Media and Communication

Joan Pedro-Carañana, Rodrigo Gómez, Thomas F. Corrigan, Francisco Sierra Caballero, 2024-02-01. The first book dedicated specifically to research methods in the political economy of media and communication, it provides a methodological toolkit to investigate the functioning of media technology and cultural industries in their historical, institutional, structural and systemic contexts. Featuring contributions from across the globe and a variety of methodological perspectives, this volume presents the state of the art in political economy of media and communication methods, articulating those methods with adjacent approaches to study concentration of ownership and power, pluralism and diversity, regulation and public policies, governance, genderization and sustainability. This collection charts the methodological innovations critical political economists are adopting to analyse a rapidly transforming digital media landscape, exploring ideology, narratives, socio analysis and praxis in communication with ethnographic and participatory approaches as well as designs for quantitative and qualitative methods of textual discourse and content analysis, network analyses which consider power relations affecting communication, including intersectional oppressions and the new developments taking place in artificial intelligence. An essential text for advanced undergraduates, postgraduate students and researchers in the areas of media, cultural and communication studies, particularly those studying topics such as the political economy of media and or communication media and communication theory and research methods.

British Marxism and Cultural Studies

Philip Bounds, David Berry, 2016-04-20. A comprehensive exploration of the profound influence of Marxist ideas on the development of Cultural Studies in Britain, this volume covers a century of Marxist writing, balancing synoptic accounts of the various schools of Marxist thought with detailed analyses of the most important writers. Arguing that a recognisably Marxist tradition of cultural analysis began in the last two decades of the nineteenth century and continues unbroken to the present day, British Marxism and Cultural Studies traces the links between contemporary developments in the field and the extended tradition of which they form a part. With discussion of figures such as Jack Lindsay, C. L. R. James, Julian Stallabrass and Mike Wayne as well as the cultural thinking of the New Left, Gramscian, Althusserian and Political Economy schools, this book shows that the history of British cultural
