An announcement may tell you that first-class cars will be in sector B and second-class cars in sectors C and D, or you may find signs showing the makeup or consist of the principal trains and the location on the platform where the cars will be. You may also see indicators at the platforms telling what the next train will be.

Occasionally there are last-minute changes. Which the signs, indicators, and video screens. If you hear an announcement you don't understand and everyone at your platform moves to a different platform, that's a good indication you should do the same, or at least ask someone.

On the continent many through trains carry cars to several destinations, and at junctions the cars are uncoupled and switched into other trains. You'll want to find a car going in your direction.

Naturally, every car carries a destination plate or sign next to the driver's compartment of the car. On a branch line the plate may

Near the door of this French coach is a T, indicating first class, a note saying this door is the one for places 11 to 34 (so you don't have to walk the whole length of the car), and symbols for restaurant, cigarette books, and air conditioning (sun and snowflakes). The reversible plate next to the door indicates that this is train 473 from Paris (Montparnasse station) to Port-Bou.
