Reluctant Soloist:

We Will Breathe Again Richard Brock, 2003-10 A macho struggle for supremacy over a barbecue a young boy's daydream carved on a wall a snatched moment of passion in a cramped tunnel deep underground two obsessive genealogists united by a century old tragedy and one man's bizarre newspaper buying habits These unforgettable moments chronicle the lives of a diverse range of characters played out against a backdrop of over 150 years of British industrial history The author explores the effects both protective and oppressive of industrial communities on those who live at the heart of them His lucid prose vividly depicts the humanity of the individual struggling to gain a footing in this world of mass identity and the devastating consequences of the industrial decay of the late Twentieth Century on those whose lives have been built around it This finely crafted short story collection introduces a fresh and youthful new voice in fiction
