Although a growing number of disciplines examine performance and have embraced performance theory, Della Pollock's introduction to Remembering: Oral History Performance argues that oral history shares a unique relation to this heightened mode of display. She likens the promissory quality of the performer–audience dynamic to the more subtle expectations binding oral historians to their interviewees. Inviting others to share life experience invokes a “tacit agreement that what is heard will be integrated into public memory and social knowledge in such a way that, directly or indirectly, it will make a material difference” (3). More unusual, however, are the overt transformations Pollock's nine contributors make: reenacting their subjects' personal memories in public contexts, or turning actual events into performative (and thus inexact) representations.

The book starts with a simple premise: “history cannot be held privately” (5). However, each author grapples differently with what it means to claim remembering as a collaborative act. Alicia J. Rouverol's account of the “life reviews” she facilitated at a medium-security prison illustrates the stakes of sharing inner realities with outside audiences. Not only do Rouverol's subjects hazard the responses of fellow inmates, who use vulnerability to establish control, these subjects also relate their traumatic pasts to youths facing similar crises. Hopeful that their retrospections can alter the future for at-risk adolescents, prisoners describe pivotal experiences with drugs, poverty, sexual abuse, and racism. Rouverol discusses the insights men gain by performing one another's stories. She herself takes a risk in noting inmates whose situations worsen despite their testimony, and in describing her racial and gendered conflicts with several participants.

The status of presence is a central tension in Shannon Jackson's analysis of Shannon Flattery's Touchable Stories, site-specific installations based on fieldwork in working-class neighborhoods. Jackson's goal in mapping the conceptual genealogies that inform Flattery's material practices is a “comeback to deconstruction's critique of presence and orality” (49). Jackson cites stories about domestic violence told by battered women yet transmitted to audiences through audio speakers implanted in felt mittens. Community members who contributed testimony about that community's public and private histories were often present at the installations, and thus witnesses to their own utterances. Being present to one's own earlier testimony is one way in which “speaker and listener” were paradoxically “present to the utterance simultaneously,” a copresence too skillful “to be shunted to the realm of an outdated metaphysics” (61). For Jackson, these disembodied yet tactile voices “testify to the multiple technologies available to enable a moment of human connection” (62). Nevertheless, her tireless valorization of Flattery's complex framing also begs the question: Would hearing “live” women recount their abuse directly be perceived as naive, and thus dismissed presentations The Storytelling State Cheng Nien Yuan, 2025-07-31 In The Storytelling State Cheng Nien Yuan a Singaporean performance scholar and dramaturg charts Singapore's development into a storytelling state since the 2010s. In such a state public autobiographical stories of everyday people elicited through visualized narrative interviews proliferate the nation's mediascape. Governmental agencies and government-linked institutions actively facilitate this phenomenon through campaigns and funding incentives. Examining several key campaigns from the period of 2011–2021, Cheng shows how state and society collaborate to cultivate an intimate confessional public. Taken together, these stories generate a new paradigm of communicating social policy and the Singapore Story by mapping the national archive onto everyday bodies. Bite-sized pieces of consumable lives are marketed as authentic windows to the private self-producing ways of being, doing, and feeling in the nation in accordance with contemporary societal concerns. This book enters a larger debate about storytelling's impact around the world in the digital age. Singapore's storytelling state functions within a global network of performing memory with new media. Its origins can be traced to popular American models of oral history telling as seen in StoryCorps and Humans of New York with their techniques appropriated for a Singaporean audience. Yet even when well-intentioned, the claims of such projects of giving voice to the non-elite and the marginalized can be undermined by injurious effects that are not unique to the Singaporean context. At the same time, the embodied and emotional nature of these performances make the absolute control of meaning difficult. Often they reveal more than they should, transgressing the normative demands of the storytelling state. At stake here are performances of identity, mobility, and belonging. When the national stage is set for life itself, what does it mean to have a life? Ethnotheatre Johnny Saldaña, 2016-06-16 Ethnotheatre transforms research about human experiences into a dramatic presentation for an audience. Johnny Saldaña, one of the best-known practitioners of this research tradition, outlines the key principles and practices of ethnotheatre in this clear, concise volume. He covers the preparation of a dramatic presentation from the research and writing stages to the elements of stage production. Saldaña nurtures playwrights through adaptation and stage exercises and delves into the complex ethical questions of turning the personal into theatre. Throughout, he emphasizes the vital importance of creating good theatre as well as good research for impact on an audience and performers. The volume includes multiple scenes from contemporary ethnodramas plus two complete play scripts as exemplars of the genre. Identity Research and Communication Nilanjana Bardhan, Mark P. Orbe, 2012-04-05 The concept of identity has steadily emerged in importance in the field of intercultural communication, especially over the last two decades. In a transnational world marked by complex connectivity as well as enduring differences and power inequities, it is imperative to understand and continuously theorize how we perceive the self in relation to the cultural other. Such understandings play a central role in how we negotiate relationships, build alliances, promote peace, and strive for social justice across cultural differences in various contexts. Identity Research in Intercultural Communication, edited by Nilanjana Bardhan and Mark P. Orbe, is unique in scope because it brings together a vast range of positions on identity scholarship under one umbrella It tracks the state of identity research in the field and includes cutting edge theoretical essays some supported by empirical data and queries what kinds of theoretical methodological praxiological and pedagogical boundaries researchers should be pushing in the future This collection s primary and qualitative focus is on more recent concepts related to identity that have emerged in scholarship such as power privilege intersectionality critical selfhood hybridity diaspora cosmopolitanism queer theory globalization and transnationalism immigration gendered and sexual politics self reflexivity positionality agency ethics dialogue and dialectics and more The essays are critical interpretive postmodern postcolonial and performative in perspective and they strike a balance between U S and transnational views on identity This volume is an essential text for scholars educators students and intercultural consultants and trainers
