Committee on Agriculture. Subcommittee on Departmental Operations, 1974 Population and Food Supply United Nations. Department of Public Information, United Nations. Office of Public Information, 1962 Population and Food Supply Conrad Taeuber, Hunger continues to be an ever present companion of many millions of people Although the farmers of the world have grown more food they have not grown enough more to correct the serious undernutrition which has long existed in many countries Since the end of World War II food production has increased about as rapidly as world population but it increased more rapidly in the richer better fed countries while the poorer countries lagged behind Two thirds of the world s 3 3 billion people live in countries with national average diets which are nutritionally inadequate The diet deficient countries generally have high rates of population growth about 2 1 per cent per year compared with about 1 3 per cent per year in the diet adequate areas In recent years the gap in available food supplies per person between the rich and the poor countries has been widening rather than narrowing A growing share of the increase in population in the less developed countries is being sustained by food shipments from the developed regions especially North America The possibilities of increasing food production are very large and they are primarily dependent on increasing the yields of crops and of livestock New methods new strains of plants improved methods of cultivation greatly increased use of fertilizers and greater and more effective use of water are major elements in increasing yields Nonconventional sources of food may in the future add significantly to available food supplies In many countries institutional changes are necessary in order to enable farmers to benefit directly from increased production and to make available the information credit tools and supplies needed to increase yields Rising educational levels are an essential element in programs for such increases World Population and Food Supply J. H. Lowry, 1970 Secondary education level textbook on geographical aspects of population growth trends nutrition levels and possibilities of intensifying world agriculture References maps and statistical tables Population and Food in the Early Twenty-first Century Nurul Islam, 1995-01-01 The IFPRI roundtable with its focus on the prospects of a long term balance between food demand and supply provided a link between the two conferences as the adequacy of food supply at affordable prices for future populations is a crucial element in a strategy designed to alleviate poverty and accelerate growth in the context of an increasing population World Population and World Food Supplies E. John Russell, 2019-07-19 Originally published in 1954 This great work surveys the distribution of the world s population and the food production of all countries chosen as important by reason of either their demands on the world food market or their contributions to it The author concludes that the more advanced countries can be reasonably assured of food supplies for an indefinite period The less advanced countries can no longer rely on self contained systems they must seek co operation with the advanced countries to supply them with the appliances needed for a more highly developed agriculture This book at the time gave statesmen and their scientific advisers agriculturalists and agricultural economists an invaluable new instrument Food and Nutrition Information and Educational Materials Center catalog Food and Nutrition Information Center (U.S.),1976
