

II. D Target Population

The Target Population consists of working-age (18-64), low-income persons with disabilities, an identifiable and significant group that is underrepresented in the workforce and one of the poorest minorities in the United States. A disability is defined by the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research, U.S. Department of Education, as: "a physical, mental, or emotional impairment that requires accommodation to allow performance of functions required to carry out life activities." The Target Population served by The Abilities Fund cuts across gender, age group, ethnicity, and type and severity of disability. Customers will be drawn from all over the nation: a majority of people with disabilities have pressing financial need, regardless of where in the country they live and whether they come from metropolitan or rural areas. This broad service area will ensure that assistance is provided for a representative range of people with disabilities across the nation.

National statistics from a variety of sources document the economic distress of people with disabilities. The past decade has seen unprecedented changes in public policy for people with disabilities, such as the 1990 passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), yet striking gaps in income, poverty, employment, and general satisfaction with life persist between those with and without disabilities. Despite years of sustained economic growth and increasingly low unemployment nationwide, people with disabilities are still poorer than the rest of the population and continue to face overwhelming discrimination in the workplace and in life. Even more alarmingly, statistics reflect no conclusive evidence that such disparities are lessening. The Target Population selected faces significant financial inequity and a myriad of associated hardships.

Several different indicators can be used to demonstrate the economic distress of people with disabilities. Depending on age and definition of disability, the poverty rates of people with disabilities range from 50% to an outrageous 300% higher than the general population. Furthermore, more than one third (34%) of people live on a "very low" household income of less than $15,000 per year, compared to just 12% of people without disabilities (NOD). Poverty is directly related to the ability to work—while one in ten working-age adults with no work limitations live in poverty, the rate is three times greater for those with some work limitations, rising to 38.3% for working-age adults with a "severe disability." Although part of this difference is due to the greater number of part-time and temporary workers in the disability population, the poverty rate among full-time, year-round workers with disabilities is still 60% higher than among their counterparts with no disabilities (DSC).

Significant income discrepancies exist between Americans with and without disabilities, regardless of gender and age. Those with disabilities who are employed earn only 72% on average of what workers without disabilities earn annually. Comparing full-time, year-round workers, average monthly earnings for males with disabilities are $1,560 and for females are $1,100, while males without disabilities average $2,190 and females, $1,470 (SIPP). (See Figure 1.) Difference in earnings increases sharply as people get older. While the youngest age group (16-24) does not differ appreciably in mean yearly earnings from the average for all workers of these ages, average earnings of people with

Populations, Public Health, and the Law Wendy E. Parmet, 2009-04-02 Law plays a crucial role in protecting the health of populations Whether the public health threat is bioterrorism pandemic influenza obesity or lung cancer law is an essential tool for addressing the problem Yet for many decades courts and lawyers have frequently overlooked law's critical importance to public health Populations Public Health and the Law seeks to remedy that omission The book demonstrates why public health protection is a vital objective for the law and presents a new population based approach to legal analysis that can help law achieve its public health mission while remaining true to its own core values By looking at a diverse range of topics including food safety death and dying and pandemic preparedness Wendy E Parmet shows how a population based legal analysis that recalls the importance of populations and uses the tools of public health can enhance legal decision making while protecting both public health and the rights and liberties of individuals and their communities
