Pollution Studies C.S. Giam, Henri J.-M. Dou, 2013-06-29 A distinction between contamination and pollution is useful when we wish to consider what strategies to adopt in researching the impact of anthropogenic activities on the marine environment Contamination strictly refers to the chemical burden imposed on the system and is evaluated in terms of the concentrations of chemical compounds in various abiotic e g water suspended particulate matter sediments and biotic plant and animal pelagic and benthic components The concept of pollution on the other hand infers an assessment of biological response to the measured levels of contamination This response may be measured at various levels of biological organisation from molecular events within the cell to changes in such ecosystem properties as nutrient flux and biological productivity Such measures of biological response need not infer any value judgements regarding putative damage or disturbance to the natural systems although the biologist will usually have in mind a reference point of normality with which to compare the measured response departure from this normality may then provide a quantitative index of disturbance The challenge to scientists engaged in research into marine contamination and pollution is to weld the chemical and biological elements together always with reference also to the physical features of the environment so as to provide a coherent framework for the quantitative evaluation of environmental response Monitoring for Gaseous Pollutants in Museum Environments Cecily M. Grzywacz, 2006-09-01 With an emphasis on passive sampling this volume focuses on the environmental monitoring for common gaseous pollutants It offers an overview of the history and nature of pollutants of concern to museums and the challenges facing scientists conservators and managers seeking to develop target pollutant guidelines to protect cultural property
