No wonder Rolls-Royce USA didn't last. Rolls-Royce would only do things the English way, even in America. For example the American factory made a horn button exactly as in England at a cost of $14, when a perfectly adequate one could be bought locally for 75 cents. And the simple push-pull knobs (costing a dollar each) used on all American cars were rejected in favour of a smoother mechanism, the assembly of which involved 227 components and 225 special fasteners. The tools to make it cost $69,000 and the cost per unit was at least twenty times that of the native American product.

The most embarrassing moment in Rolls-Royce history: L. J. Belnap, President of Rolls-Royce USA, left the company in April 1925. Rolls-Royce decided to present him with a most expensive engraved Patek Philippe gold watch in recognition of his services. After a touching speech, the Rolls-Royce Treasurer made to hand over the watch, dropped it – and it was shattered beyond repair.
