Chapter I

We emulate the Rollo books. Sure a terrible time I was out o the way. Over the sea over the sea. Till I come to Ireland one sunny day. Betther for me, betther for me. The first time me fut got the feel o the ground. I was strollin along in an Irish city. That hasn't its aquil the world around. For the air that is sweet an the girls that are pretty.

Moirá O'Neill, Dublin. O Carolan's Private Hotel. It is the most absurd thing in the world that Salemina Francesca and I should be in Ireland together. That any three spinsters should be fellow travellers is not in itself extraordinary, and so our former journeyings in England and Scotland could hardly be described as eccentric in any way, but now that I am a matron and Francesca is shortly to be married, it is odd to say the least to see us cosily ensconced in a private sitting room of a Dublin hotel, the table laid for three and not a vestige of a man anywhere to be seen. Where one might ask if he knew the antecedent circumstances are Miss Hamilton's American spouse and Miss Monroe's Scottish lover. Francesca had passed most of the winter in Scotland. Her indulgent parent had given his consent to her marriage with a Scotsman but insisted that she take a year to make up her mind as to which particular one. Memories of her past flirtations, divagations, plans for a life of single blessedness all conspired to make him incredulous, and the loyal Salemina, feeling some responsibility in the matter, had elected to remain by Francesca's side during the time when her affections were supposed to be crystallising into some permanent form. It was natural enough that my husband and I should spend the first summer of our married life abroad, for we had been accustomed to do this before we met, a period that we always allude to as the Dark Ages, but no sooner had we arrived in Edinburgh and no sooner had my husband persuaded our two friends to join us in a long, delicious Irish holiday than he was compelled to return to America for a month or so I think you must number among your acquaintances such a man as Mr William Beresford whose wife I have the honour to be Physically the type is vigorous or has the appearance and gives the impression of being vigorous because it has never the time to be otherwise since it is always engaged in nursing its ailing or decrepit relatives Intellectually it is full of vitality any mind grows when it is exercised and the brain that has to settle all its own affairs and all the affairs of its friends and acquaintances could never lack energy Spiritually it is almost too good for earth and any woman who lives in the house with it has moments of despondency and self chastisement in which she fears that heaven may prove all too small to contain the perfect being and its unregenerate family as well Financially it has at least a moderate bank account that is it is never penniless indeed it can never afford to be because it is peremptory that it should possess funds in order to disburse them to needier brothers
