

The background of the book cover is a photograph of a dimly lit stone tunnel. The tunnel is constructed from large, rough-hewn stone blocks. At the far end of the tunnel, there is a window with a grid of panes, through which bright light is streaming, creating a strong contrast and a long, bright path on the floor of the tunnel.

Problems associated with African history. Orality as a source James Pinnock, 2018-02-27. Essay from the year 2010 in the subject History Africa grade 80. 0% language English abstract. History according to E. H. Carr cannot be written unless the historian can achieve some kind of contact with those about whom he is writing. Throughout the pursuit of history we search for a link between the past and the present and that almost definitively arrives in the form of written sources. However, how should we approach history when written sources elude us and all we have to rely on for the most part are oral sources and tradition? A nature that certainly defines the so-called acephalous societies of pre-colonial Africa and to a lesser extent contemporary Africa. Orality is not seen in modern scholarship admittedly dominated by Western and Europeanized thought as a viable or reliable source for constructing history. Yet does this orality consign Africa to the peripheries of history to the wastelands of historical thought and theory? Is Africa as Hugh Trevor Roper once claimed unhistoric? This essay will examine whether oral sources are a sufficient foundation for the history of a continent and whether their innate weaknesses and flaws as a source indeed render them as previously believed inadequate for such a venture. Of paramount importance in this essay is to assess whether a history of Africa can survive within the ideas of what History is and should be. Ideas ultimately Western indeed European in their conception. Or can we separate Africa from Europe both in terms of colonial impact and historical theory and create a purely Africanist history? Hence by the end of this essay I hope to have displayed that oral sources have value within themselves as a source for history and that the constraints of European history need not necessarily apply to Africa. Perhaps then Africa can be resurrected from the graveyard of academic publishing.

History and Economic Life Georg Christ, Philipp R. Rössner, 2020-02-27. History and Economic Life offers students a wide-ranging introduction to both quantitative and qualitative approaches to interpreting economic history sources from the Middle Ages to the Twentieth Century. Having identified an ever-widening gap between the use of qualitative sources by cultural historians and quantitative sources by economic historians, the book aims to bridge the divide by making economic history sources more accessible to students and the wider public and highlighting the need for a complementary rather than exclusive approach. Divided into two parts, the book begins by equipping students with a toolbox to approach economic history sources considering the range of sources that might be of use and introducing different ways of approaching them. The second part consists of case studies that examine how economic historians use such sources, helping readers to gain a sense of context and understanding of how these sources can be used. The book thereby sheds light on important debates both within and beyond the field and highlights the benefits gained when combining qualitative and quantitative approaches to source analysis. Introducing sources often avoided in culturally minded history or statistically minded economic history courses respectively and advocating a combined quantitative and qualitative approach, it is an essential resource for students undertaking source analysis within the field.

The New Atheist Denial of History B. Painter, 2014-11-19 This compact forcefully argued work calls Sam Harris Richard Dawkins Steven Pinker and the rest of the so called New Atheists to account for failing to take seriously the historical record to which they so freely appeal when attacking religion The popularity of such books as Harris s The End of Faith Dawkins s The God Delusion and Christopher Hitchens God Is Not Great set off a spate of reviews articles and books for and against yet in all the controversy little attention has focused on the historical evidence and arguments they present to buttress their case This book is the first to challenge in depth the distortions of this New Atheist history It presents the evidence that the three authors and their allies ignore It points out the lack of historical credibility in their work when judged by the conventional criteria used by mainstream historians It does not deal with the debate over theism and atheism nor does it aim to defend the historical record of Christianity or religion more generally It does aim to defend the integrity of history as a discipline in the face of its distortion by those who violate it
