

on the ancient knives are more beautiful than ours. A handle of ivory on one is carved to represent the figure of an Atlas, another represents a full-armed gladiator, another is like a fish, and so on for scores of different handles of beautiful shapes. Ancient footrules have been found in France, Italy, and Switzerland. An ivory rule found recently at Brugg is divided on one side into twelve inches, and on the other side into four marked spaces of three inches each. A beautiful set of surgical instruments of bronze of the first century A.D. was found some years ago at Colophon. They are now at Johns Hopkins University. There are several other sets also in European museums.

A half century ago a fortune was made by the invention of the safety pin. Some ancient person will rise from the dead one of these times and sue for accumulated royalties. The safety pins in bronze, in silver, and in gold, with pin, bow, catch, and all — except that all the thousand varieties are artistic in shape without losing safety value — are now by the hundreds in every good museum, and many of them go back in date a thousand years more B.C. than we are since.

But of course we beat those ancients in the pride of our civilization, waterworks and sewers? If digging them up and keeping them in public view is the criterion, we certainly do.

The excavations of Sir Arthur Evans at Cnossus in Crete laid bare a sewerage system of some 1,500 years or so B.C. about as good as ours of today. The lead water pipes in Pompeii and Ostia are only 1,000 years old. Yet in one of the houses in the Street of Abundance at Pompeii which was excavated only last summer, you can turn on the ancient faucet, just like ours, and the fountains will play for you from the same openings through which the water sprayed or shot, two millennia ago.

It begins to look as if we do nothing that those ancients also did not know how to do. Painted Greek vases show that they "shot craps," that they played checkers and parchesi, that they had perfect form in leg action in the sprints and the distance races, that they threw the discus, that they used knuckles instead of gloves in boxing, that they wore clothes as short, as brilliantly colored, and as diaphanous as any that show off the dancer, the actress, or the debutante of today.
