Mab Media In The Asian Pacific:

Disaster Relief in the Asia Pacific Minako Sakai, Edwin Jurriëns, Jian Zhang, Alec Thornton, 2014-01-03 A UN report recently found that the Asia Pacific is the world's most disaster prone region. Indeed, considering that the region accounts for more than half of the total number of disasters in the world, building capacity and resilience to mitigate the devastating impact of disasters is a pressing task for local actors. This book takes a regional multidisciplinary and multi-actor approach to improve understandings of how various actors respond to natural and human-induced disasters in the Asia Pacific region. It examines the ideas and activities of four different categories of agents: civil society, military, and state institutions, local cultural knowledge, and the media and economic initiatives, and these themes are approached from various academic disciplines ranging from anthropology and cultural studies to economics, human geography, and political science. The contributors draw their findings from a variety of countries in the region, including China, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Japan, Myanmar, and Samoa, and importantly focus on the interconnection between vulnerability and resilience. In turn, the book highlights how the nature and magnitude of disasters are influenced by social conditions and aims to contribute to policies that prioritize development opportunities to enhance resilience. Further, it explores the complicated and multifaceted role of agency in building resilience and presents a comparative framework for analysis. Key findings from the Asia Pacific region. The focus of this book on recent and ongoing disasters makes it a topical and timely contribution to the growing field of disaster management, and as such, it will appeal to students and scholars of environmental studies, development studies, and Asian politics.

Service Industries and Asia Pacific Cities Peter W. Daniels, Kong Chong Ho, Tom Hutton, 2005-04-01 During the second half of the twentieth century, development in the Asia Pacific region has been dominated by industrialization. However, at the beginning of the twenty-first century, services in particular finance, information, and creative services have become deeply embedded in the processes of urban growth. In Asia Pacific, the rise of service industries has led to national modernization programmes and globalization strategies. Services are also driving change in the internal form of city regions and are being actively deployed as instruments of metropolitan reconfiguration and land use changes. These changes have created problems such as social polarization and the displacement of traditional industries and residential districts. Also, there are tensions between local and global processes in the development of service industries and between the imperatives of competitive advantage and sustainable development. Service Industries and Asia Pacific Cities brings together a multi-disciplinary team of experts to explore and illustrate the theoretical, conceptual, and practical issues arising from the transformation of Asia Pacific cities by service industries.

Mass Media and the Minorities, 1986 The Biodiversity Observation Network in the Asia-Pacific Region Shin-ichi Nakano, Tetsukazu Yahara, Tohru Nakashizuka, 2012-07-26 Biological diversity is important for ecosystem function and services, which in turn is essential for human well-being. Under the Convention on Biological Diversity, international efforts have been made to achieve a significant reduction in the current rate of biodiversity loss The loss continues however The Asia Pacific region includes both developing countries with high biodiversity and developed countries with sophisticated data collection and analyses but only limited information about the status quo of biodiversity in this region has been available Many Asia Pacific countries have rapidly grown their economies and social infrastructures causing a loss of biodiversity and requiring an urgent mandate to achieve a balance between development and conservation in the region In December 2009 scientists successfully organized the Asia Pacific Biodiversity Observation Network in the region to establish a network for research and monitoring of ecosystems and biodiversity and to build a cooperative framework The present volume is the first collection of information on biodiversity in the Asia Pacific and represents a quantum step forward in science that optimizes the synergy between development and biodiversity conservation
