Representation In State Legislatures:

Representation in State Legislatures Malcolm E. Jewell, 2021-03-17 Every two years American voters turn out to elect several thousand representatives to state legislatures Only now in Representation in State Legislatures do we have a detailed examination of how these officials perceive their jobs and how they attempt to do them To provide answers to these questions Malcolm E Jewell conducted intensive interviews with 220 members of houses of representatives in nine selected states He asked each legislator how he kept in touch with his constituents how he resolved matters of policy how he sought government resources for his district and what services he provided for individual constituents State legislatures differ greatly and they are not institutionalized to the same degree as the national congress It is difficult therefore to generalize on such effects as partisanship Likewise it appears that past explanatory models do not adequately describe the complex relationships seen by most legislators in their work The state legislature is changing It is becoming more institutionalized It is becoming more stable as fewer members retire and more are reelected The trend is toward longer sessions increased staff and more activity With this trend the legislator is becoming more visible he can deal with lawmaking while having greater opportunities to provide services and to gain publicity for them As the move begun by the Reagan administration to put more responsibility for programs on the states continues the state legislatures will assume a place of greater importance in the governing of the United States This pioneering study of representation will thereby gain significance both for the understanding it imparts and for the new questions it raises

The Hourglass of Representation Erik Hanson, 2022 How does institutional differences across state legislatures representation and the political pathways of women people of color and working class state legislators While some studies have focused on institutional elements of state legislatures few have focused on how representational pathways are affected for individual legislators Furthermore studies that have focused on legislator pathways have generally analyzed one particular state legislature This project will contribute to the literature on state legislatures by taking a mixed methods interstate and institutional approach to studying representation The theoretical framework for analyzing the constraint among legislators is an Hourglass of Representation in which legislators and particularly people of color legislators are pinched between bottom up pressures from their district along with social movements and interest groups and top down forces including the leadership structure and culture of the legislature and state level political and institutional forces I argue that people of color women and working class legislators are particularly constrained by this situation both because the bottom up forces facing them are more intense and the roadblocks facing them for obtaining power and advancing agendas are more severe There are three key contributions this dissertation makes to the Political Science literature on representation in state legislatures The first study contains an analysis of legislator interaction with constituents including constituent work in district legislator events and other forms of legislative styles that emerge among legislators This work is related to Richard Fenno's Homestyle and related work on credit claiming and the personal vote for a representative It is in conversation with and expands on the work found in Homestyle by using a variety of methods to analyze legislator activities Furthermore it is one of relatively few studies which studies both legislative lawmaking and constituent services in the same project Additionally it combines legislative activity with their subsequent progressive advancement to Congress and other legislative bodies or elected offices In the course of this research I argue that many people of color legislators place a greater effort on Homestyle Politics than would be predicted simply from electoral incentives This is in part that many people of color legislators face unique pressures from their district frequently their districts are among the most left leaning in the state legislature they are likely to be indebted to ideological groups who helped them run for office and originally recruited them and also these districts operate in a context of hostility from the state government at large To address this question I assembled a unique data set of legislator communication via public twitter accounts in 2016 and 2017 The second study contains an analysis of visible and less visible legislative actions to secure substantive representation for people of color groups There will be a discussion of how focusing on latter stages in the legislative process may obscure the unique legislative styles of people of color legislators It also contains a cross state analysis of the varying role of legislative institutions and their effects on the opportunities and trade offs legislators are faced with Discussion of how some forms of constraint on legislators are relatively identity neutral while others more strongly inhibit the choices of women people of color or particularly women of color To address this question I assembled a unique data set of bill and resolution sponsorship including its eventual passage in the legislature among all state legislatures in 2016 and 2017 via legiscan com The third study continues the legislative institutional argument by looking at the role of state party and legislative institutions on equality of access to legislative office and progressive advancement to Congress This is followed by a discussion of how these sources of constraint occur at many stages in the career of a legislator Many of these forms of constraint most negatively affect legislators wanting to advance radical redistributive politics across class and racial lines along with advocating for those in which there is a consensus across both political parties of marginality non citizens criminals prisoners people expressing anti American or irreligious viewpoints etc To address this question I assembled a unique data set of the occupational backgrounds and electoral history of all state legislators and members of Congress for the year 2020 from existing public data Three key findings were found from the aforementioned studies and they are as follows State legislators from non white backgrounds particularly Black legislators devote more effort to constituency service and particularly constituent service events Furthermore these legislatures showed much higher levels of tailoring events and information to diverse groups of constituents rather than relying on generic information another sign of legislative effort This may come from group consciousness held by the legislator in some cases although it also may be informed by the constraint faced by these legislators in other avenues Legislators constrained from taking action in the legislative arena e g committee work may devote more attention to activities where they have more autonomy Legislators from legislatures with higher variation in legislative activity are less likely to ascend to higher office including moving from the state house to the state senate The variation in legislative activity is theorized to be reflective of inequality within the legislature in power and open avenues for lawmaking Although in theory a legislature with no variation in legislative activity could also be a sign of legislative constraint this was not found to be the case within any legislature Future work will explore other measures of legislative success besides election to higher office and reelection Members of Congress with past legislative experience were far more likely to come from legislatures with more professionalized state legislatures Professionalized state legislatures were also more likely to show lower levels of legislative inequality and constraint However it is important to note that even in the best state legislatures on these measures the legislatures were still quite unequal in legislative power and the constraint facing their members Furthermore they all showed evidence of bias in recruitment networks that made it less likely for legislators of nontraditional backgrounds to run for higher office and win This dissertation contributes to the growing understanding of the role of formal and informal political institutions on the representation of marginalized groups and the political pathways of legislators in unequal legislative environments Furthermore it makes a contribution to the literature on credit claiming electoral threat and homestyle politics literature in Political Science Representation in State Legislatures George Henry Haynes, 1895 How Women Represent Women Tracy L. Osborn, 2012-03-22 This title argues that political parties fundamentally structure the ways in which women legislators represent women's interests Using original election sponsorship and roll call data across the US state chambers Osborn shows how parties shape the policy alternatives women offer Congruence, Responsiveness, and Representation in American State Legislatures Boris Shor, 2014 Two problems hinder the ability of scholars to assess the quality of representation of state level public opinion by elected representatives First the main tool measuring ideology in public opinion has historically been self reported but this is now well known to be severely plagued by measurement error Second and far more binding we lack a common scale on which to place both constituents and representatives While the literature has addressed a number of methods estimating a common space for politicians ideal points across political institutions little work exists that incorporates citizens into this space The unified methodology in this paper solves both problems in order to assess representation of constituents by their individual state legislators the parties in the state legislatures and the state legislature as a whole Bridging is accomplished using policy preference questions from a state and congressional candidate survey administered since the early 1990s I ask those questions in my own 2008 survey of over 4 200 citizen respondents representative at the state and national levels Thus citizens and state legislators can be located on the same ideological scale I employ multilevel regression with poststratification to model state level public ideology and obtain aggregate opinion estimates for all 50 states and 1942 upper chamber state legislative districts State legislators and chamber and party medians are responsive to public opinion but they are very often incongruent to it Democrats and Republicans diverge from district and state opinion but in an asymmetric

Devolution and Black State Legislators Tyson King-Meadows, Thomas F. Schaller, 2012-02-01 Devolution and Black State Legislators examines whether black state legislators can produce qualitative gains in the substantive representation of black interests Once a battle cry by southern conservatives new federalism has shifted power from Washington to the respective state governments and ironically has done so as black state legislators grow in number Tyson King Meadows and Thomas F Schaller look at the debates surrounding black political incorporation the tradeoffs between substantive and descriptive representation racial redistricting and the impact of black legislators on state budgetary politics They situate contemporary constraints on black state elites as the union of macro and micro level forces which allows for a reconsideration of how the idiosyncrasies of political economic and geographic culture converge with the internal dynamics of state legislative processes to produce particular environments Interviews with black legislators provide valuable insights into how such idiosyncrasies may deprive institutional advancement committee assignments chairmanships and party leadership positions of the influence it once afforded
