Weyers,1961 A direct descent is one in which the main descent propulsion system

burns continuously from lunar approach to touchdown The characteristic velocity requirement for direct lunar descents is presented as a function of the landing site location relative to the normal impact point Results are included for translunar trip times of 60 75 and 90 hours for specific impulses representative of both Earth storable and cryogenic propulsion systems for landing sites located anywhere on the lunar surface and for ignition thrust to Earth weight ratios between 0.12 and 10.0 The data presented are useful in determining approximate performance capability and in evaluating tradeoffs during preliminary mission planning studies

The Twin Sister Planets Venus and Earth Robert J. Malcuit, 2014-11-25 This book explains how it came to be that Venus and Earth while very similar in chemical composition zonation size and heliocentric distance from the Sun are very different in surface environmental conditions It is argued here that these differences can be accounted for by planetoid capture processes and the subsequent evolution of the planet satellite system Venus captured a one half moon mass planetoid early in its history in the retrograde direction and underwent its fatal attraction scenario with its satellite Adonis Earth on the other hand captured a moon mass planetoid Luna early in its history in prograde orbit and underwent a benign estrangement scenario with its captured satellite
