1960s through to the end of the 1970s this book looks at how successive governments tried to address growing concerns about urban deprivation across Britain. It provides unique insights into policy and governance and into the socio-economic and cultural causes and consequences of poverty. Starting with the impact of redevelopment policies, immigration and the rise of the inner city, this book examines the pressures and challenges that explain the development of policy by successive Labour and Conservative governments. It looks at the effectiveness and limits of different community development approaches and at the inadequacies of policy in tackling urban deprivation. In doing so, the book highlights the restricted impact of pilot projects and reform of public services in resolving deprivation, as well as the broader limits of social planning and state welfare. Crucially, it also plots the shift in policy from an emphasis on achieving statutory service efficiencies and rolling out social development programmes towards an ever greater stress on regeneration and support for private capital as the solution to transforming the inner city.

Seat at the Table William Boyce, 2001. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been used to strike down fifty-eight statutes that permitted the exclusion of persons with disabilities, women, ethnic minorities, or gays and lesbians. While some conservatives see this trend as rulings for the many by the few, those representing excluded groups view their successful court challenges against unjust laws as a long-awaited coming of age, allowing them to finally obtain a seat at the table.

Environmental Dispute Resolution Lawrence S. Bacow, Michael Wheeler, 2013-06-29. This book has its origins in an MIT research project that was funded by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Our immediate objective was to prepare a set of case studies that examined bargaining and negotiation as they occurred between government environmental advocates and regulatees throughout the traditional regulatory process. The project was part of a larger effort by the EPA to make environmental regulation more efficient and less litigious. The principal investigator for the research effort was Lawrence Suskind of the Department of Urban Studies and Planning. Eight case studies were prepared under the joint supervision of Suskind and the authors of this book. Studying the negotiating behavior of parties as we worked our way through an environmental dispute proved enlightening. We observed missed opportunities for settlement, negotiating tactics that backfired, and strategies that appeared to be grounded more in intuition than in thoughtful analysis. At the same time, however, we were struck by how often the parties ultimately managed to muddle through. People negotiated not out of some idealistic commitment to consensus but because they thought it better served their own interests. When some negotiations reached an impasse, people improvised mediation. These disputants succeeded in spite of legal and institutional barriers, even though few of them had a sophisticated understanding of negotiation.

Geographic Information Science and Public Participation Laxmi Ramasubramanian, 2010-01-23. Computer-mediated participation is at the crossroads. In the early heady days of the digital revolution, access to high technologies such as GIS promised the empowerment of marginalized communities by providing data and information that was previously hidden away from public view. To a great extent, this goal has been achieved at least in the U.S. and Western Europe. Data about a range of government initiatives and raw data about different aspects of spatial planning such as land use community facilities property ownership are available a mouse click away Now that we the public have access to information are we able to make better plans for the future of our cities and regions Are we more inclusive in our planning efforts Are we able to foster collaborative governance structures mediated by digital technologies In the book these issues will be discussed using a three part structure The first part of the book will be theoretical it will review the literature in the field establish a framework to organize the literature and to link three different subject areas participation and community development GIS and other related technologies and planning processes The second part of the book will be a series of success stories case studies that review actual situations where participatory planning using GIS has enabled community wellbeing and empowerment These case studies will vary in scale and focus on different planning issues planning broadly defined The final part of the book will step back to review alternative scenarios for the future exploring where we are headed as the technologies we are using to plan rapidly change
