Rural Development Growth And Inequity:

Partially Awakened Giants Shubham Chaudhuri, Martin Ravallion, 2006 Abstract The paper examines the ways in which recent economic growth has been uneven in China and India and what this has meant for inequality and poverty Drawing on analyses based on existing household survey data and aggregate data from official sources the authors show that growth has indeed been uneven geographically sectorally and at the household level and that this has meant uneven progress against poverty less poverty reduction than might have been achieved had growth been more balanced and an increase in income inequality The paper then examines why growth was uneven and why this should be of concern The discussion is structured around the idea that there are both good and bad inequalities drivers and dimensions of inequality and uneven growth that are good or bad in terms of what they imply for both equity and long term growth and development The authors argue that the development paths of both China and India have been influenced by and have generated both types of inequalities and that while good inequalities most notably those that reflect the role of economic incentives have been critical to the growth experience thus far there is a risk that bad inequalities those that prevent individuals from connecting to markets and limit investment and accumulation of human capital and physical capital may undermine the sustainability of growth in the coming years The authors argue that policies are needed that preserve the good inequalities continued incentives for innovation and investment but reduce the scope for bad ones notably through investments in human capital and rural infrastructure that help the poor connect to markets

The Role of Agriculture in Poverty Reduction Luc J. Christiaensen, Lionel Demery, Jesper Khl, 2006 The relative contribution of a sector to poverty reduction is shown to depend on its direct and indirect growth effects as well as its participation effect The paper assesses how these effects compare between agriculture and non agriculture by reviewing the literature and by analyzing cross country national accounts and poverty data from household surveys Special attention is given to Sub Saharan Africa While the direct growth effect of agriculture on poverty reduction is likely to be smaller than that of non agriculture though not because of inherently inferior productivity growth the indirect growth effect of agriculture through its linkages with nonagriculture appears substantial and at least as large as the reverse feedback effect The poor participate much more in growth in the agricultural sector especially in low income countries resulting in much larger poverty reduction impact Together these findings support the overall premise that enhancing agricultural productivity is the critical entry point in designing effective poverty reduction strategies including in Sub Saharan Africa Yet to maximize the poverty reducing effects the right agricultural technology and investments must be pursued underscoring the need for much more country specific analysis of the structure and institutional organization of the rural economy in designing poverty reduction strategies

Public Finance in China Jiwei Lou, Shuilin Wang, 2008-01-31 Since 1980 China's economy has been the envy of the world. Its annual growth rate of more than 9 percent during this period makes China today the world's fourth largest economy. And this sustained growth has reduced the poverty rate from 60 percent of the population to less than 10 percent. However, such rapid growth has also increased inequalities in income and access to basic services and stressed natural resources. The government seeks to resolve these and other issues by creating a harmonious society, shifting priorities from the overriding pursuit of growth to more balanced economic and social development. This volume compiles analyses and insights from high-level Chinese policy makers and prominent international scholars that address the changes needed in public finance for success in the government's new endeavor. It examines such key policy issues as public finance and the changing role of the state, fiscal reform and revenue and expenditure assignments, intergovernmental relations and fiscal transfers, and financing and delivery of basic public goods such as compulsory education, innovation, public health, and social protection. And it offers concrete recommendations for immediate policy changes and for China's future reform agenda. Public Finance in China is a must read for specialists in public finance and for those seeking an understanding of the complex and daunting challenges China is facing.

Economic Growth, Economic Performance and Welfare in South Asia R. Jha, 2005-01-06 This volume brings together frontline research on the prospects for rapid economic development in South Asia by leading academics and public policy experts. It reviews recent macroeconomic performance in Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka and examines three emergent challenges for the Indian economy: devising a policy response to climate change, attaining the millennium development goals, and restructuring state-level finances. The book then analyzes financial sector reforms and development of information and communications technology, ICT firms, and privatization policy in India and the South Asian approach to free trade arrangements and multilateral trade. It studies issues related to foreign perceptions of South Asian development, including governance and foreign direct investment flows into India and Nepal. Finally, the book studies the impact of the structural composition of economic growth on poverty in India, the evolution of inequality in India, and elements of a strategy for poverty reduction in South Asia.

Developmental Dilemmas Peter Ho, 2005-05-24 Developmental Dilemmas singles out land as an object of study and places it in the context of one of the world's largest and most populous countries undergoing institutional reform: the People's Republic of China. The book demonstrates that private property protected by law, the principle of getting the prices right, and the emergence of effectively functioning markets are the outcome of a given society's historical development and institutional fabric. Peter Ho argues that the successful creation of new institutions hinges in part on choice and timing in relation to the particular constellation of societal, economic, political, and cultural parameters. Disregarding these could result in rising inequality, bad land stewardship, and the eruption of land-related grievances.
