Chronic Pain Management Education in Physical Therapy Curriculum Stephanie Grigely, Alisha B. Hennet, Patricia J. Young, 2005 Abstract BACKGROUND AND PURPOSE Approximately 90 billion annually is spent on chronic pain due to reduced productivity and related medical expenses Patients with chronic pain are often treated by physical therapists yet there is no delineated practice pattern for this large population A study done by Scudds Scudds and Simmonds⁵ in 1996 demonstrated that pain management is not a major focus in the physical therapy classroom The purpose of this study was to document current faculty perceptions of student competency in chronic pain assessment and management the progression of the physical therapy curriculum since the study of Scudds Scudds Simmonds in 1996 and the content and curriculum hours devoted to chronic pain management education within entry level physical therapy programs SUBJECTS The target population for this study consisted of the department chairs of 100 percent 194 accredited entry level physical therapy programs in the United States as listed on the APTA web site February 2004 METHODS The pain curriculum survey developed by Scudds Scudds and Simmonds was streamlined in content and adapted to assess faculty attitudes and curriculum content specific to chronic pain Information was gathered on knowledge and use of the IASP curriculum guide for physical and occupational therapy chronic pain courses taught and approximate number of hours spent on chronic pain education and the faculty perception of competency of recent graduates in the area of chronic pain assessment and management ANALYSES Descriptive statistics were used to analyze the data obtained from the surveys as well as an independent samples t test comparing classroom hours spent on chronic pain education between masters and doctoral level programs RESULTS The chronic pain education survey yielded a 34percent 66 194 response rate Four returned surveys were not completed and were omitted from the analysis Thirty two percent 62 194 surveys were used for statistical analysis The majority of the survey respondents noted that there is an adequate amount of time spent on chronic pain topics including biology of pain pain measurement management and psychosocial issues Faculty in entry level physical therapy programs noted that students are adequately prepared to assess and treat patients with chronic pain The mean amount of classroom hours spent on chronic pain education documented among respondents was 15 hours CONCLUSIONS AND RELEVANCE Survey design may have contributed to a low response rate as well as incomplete and inaccurately completed forms Several faculty members stated their opinion that competency in chronic pain management was a skill beyond entry level and others noted that pain management education was adequate for what is expected of their students upon graduation Further research examining CAPTE requirements for the curriculum or physical therapy recent graduate s perception of competency in chronic pain management would be well warranted
