Neil Garland, 2012-12-06 The examination of excavated human bone finds is mainly the domain of anthropologists and forensic pathologists the former working with ancient and historical specimens the latter with modern finds The methodological and diagnostic approaches to these skeletal finds are the same regardless of the time of burial For physical anthropology bodily human relics are dealt with as historical resources which give clues to ancient population structure population development life style and subsistence They are thus able to help scientists understand the present state of human populations The identification of the finds whether species diagnosis or the evaluation of individual parameters such as sex age at death body size and shape kinship and pathology follows the same procedure used by forensic pathologists whose task is the identification of bodily relics in cases of crime mass disaster and the like However there are other disciplines which benefit from excavated bone finds Anatomy gains insights into the morphological variability of the skeleton in time and place The implications for modern physicians and pathologists are at least two fold pathological specimens are suitable to unravel the distribution of many diseases and the susceptibility of individuals to pathogens in pre antibiotic populations In addition to this epidemiological aspect exhumed specimens often exhibit advanced states of bone disease which are no longer or only

Human Sacrifice in Ancient Greece Dennis D. Hughes, 2013-01-11 Numerous ancient texts describe human sacrifices and other forms of ritual killing in 480 BC Themistocles sacrifices three Persian captives to Dionysus human scapegoats called pharmakoi are expelled yearly from Greek cities and according to some authors they are killed Locris girls are hunted down and slain by the Trojans on Mt Lykaion children are sacrificed and consumed by the worshippers and many other texts report human sacrifices performed regularly in the cult of the gods or during emergencies such as war and plague Archaeologists have frequently proposed human sacrifice as an explanation for their discoveries from Minoan Crete children s bones with knife cut marks the skeleton of a youth lying on a platform with a bronze blade resting on his chest skeletons sometimes bound in the dromoi of Mycenaean and Cypriot chamber tombs and dual man woman burials where it is suggested that the woman was slain or took her own life at the man s funeral If the archaeologists interpretations and the claims in the ancient sources are accepted they present a bloody and violent picture of the religious life of the ancient Greeks from the Bronze Age well into historical times But the author expresses caution In many cases alternative if less sensational explanations of the archaeological are possible and it can often be shown that human sacrifices in the literary texts are mythical or that late authors confused mythical details with actual practices Whether the evidence is accepted or not this study offers a fascinating glimpse into the religious thought of the ancient Greeks and into changing modern conceptions of their religious behaviour
