Africa of the 1950s not the stereotyped picture of wildlife safaris and leaping Masai but the emerging independence struggle of a new African nation from the viewpoint of a white police officer in an exceptionally detailed thoroughly readable firsthand account of a rare period of recent history It tells how an Australian veteran fresh from the Korean War became a colonial police officer in Tanganyika Territory later Tanzania after federation with the offshore islands of Zanzibar in 1964 The reader is taken on a journey which tourists in Africa never see from back alleys and police cells in the polyglot city of Dar es Salaam to snake infested camps on Uganda Ruanda border patrols and on police field force emergency operations from barracks at the foot of Kilimanjaro There is much here to discover about a mostly benign semi colonial period in Africa which lasted less than fifty years passing in one African's description as briefly as a butterfly's heartbeat where a few conscientious white administrators and their loyal African assistants managed vast regions of a desolate territory with remarkably selfless care and scarce resources where things worked most of the time but sometimes where chaos reigned It is about the country itself its ubiquitous animals and its people at close range including villagers criminals hunters witch doctors and colonial officials but most of all the African askari policemen who were the author's close and often only companions Butterfly's Sisters

natural world through which shines the mystery of physical reality Section four which includes a dramatic narrative account of a forest fire moves in the realm of memory its glories and its sorrows The last section fleshes out from a variety of angles the hints of hope in section one concluding with a startling at moments comical response to the wonder of the moon egg that suddenly appears in the night sky from behind backlit clouds and the poet asks Who laid it The imagery of these poems is original and vivid We are carried on a truly exciting unforgettable ride through a vast range of human experience Punch, 1898
