M.A. McGill, Ph.D. (Econ.) London

"At the present time the State which exercises control over a backward territory expects to perform three functions; to maintain the supply of exports from the territory [sugar, coffee, rubber, pepper, cotton, etc.], to protect the profitability of foreign investments in the territory, and to develop a market for its own manufactured exports." This book contains long-needed analyses of the Conditions of Labour Supply, Monetary Incentives and the Standard of Living, and Crops and Methods of Cultivation. The Plantation System and the system of Peasant Production, as they exist to-day, are closely examined; and the position of the European investor is considered at length; and a comprehensive answer is given to the disputed question of "Native" costs of production.
