

Darlene called from her mother's house in Athens, Georgia, where she was spending time while her mother was on a Caribbean cruise with a gentleman friend. "When's this so-called play open?" she asked. "If you have something special, it's just not thinking out."

"I told her the date."

"Will there be a cast party?"

"There may be, but you'll see the cast after the show. We already have a lot built up for the show, so it's just a matter of meeting and knowing our needs."

"I was thinking, wouldn't it be nice to have the party at your place?"

"I haven't heard a party since my humiliating 19th birthday, when my mother treated me all right."

"It's true you did. But skills are essential to creating the image of a man at ease with himself and his home. Who usually you invited to these things?"

"The cast and some other special guests, other actors."

"But if you're holding a so-so apartment, you could invite anybody but right?"

"No, no, no."

"Some that. Some. Some have a girlfriend that you got along with?"

"I met her friend Fern a couple of times."

"What's what you do. Stop at work in Paris. She'll be sure to mention it to Nicky. It'll say Nicky on and that you're throwing a party she hasn't been invited to or vice versa after your birthday. Then, a couple of days after you've got Fern the invitation, and Nicky too. By the time she gets her invitation, she'll want to come to the party."

"You think so?"

"I know so. Never discount female pride. The moment she gets the card she'll be on the phone with Fern, Fern, 'What you invited today—it must have gotten stuck in the mail.' This doesn't guarantee she'll show, but if she does, she'll see you being the center of attention and realize she could have been a year wile on opening night rather than just another face."

"But, Darlene, if she walks through the door with a date, I'll see."

"If she walks through that door, I'll be with Fern. They'll meet up to compare notes later. Good, Johnny, you know nothing about women."

"That's why I rely on you. My only concern is that Florence thinks Nicky and I are still a couple, so if she..."

"Do you have to worry here?"

"It's my last friend."

"Fortunately, correct. You have your notebook handy? Here's what you're going to need. I say for you some follow-up suggestions. I also want to see some photos of myself I just took. Don't get excited, they're not perfect. I need your male input about the current state of my hair. One last thing, but the female's wedding dress with it. I told her a flower costume."

"Well, it should get the guys at the bar place a laugh."

"You be sure. Do you have a secret number where you can get elaborate party tips and advice for decorations? Goodie props always get a party going. Remember that one I took you to where everyone had to wear green shirts? That was fun."

"I've not having anyone wear hole socks, Darlene. Besides, I've not met I can do all this, and that's where a play and there a party at the same time. Why can't you come north and be my official party sponsor? That way you could see the play, too."

"Well I could, but it's important that you do this on your own. But he can be put out of place later. The state of the apartment before the party starts is I can see how the decorations look and then have someone check the guests once the party's in full swing. I want to make sure and see if don't see them leaving for you in person."

"By then?" I assume you mean girlfriends."

"No, I mean friends. I really think it's time you thought about getting married. No children, Johnny, but as a single man, you're getting with the old gender ship. When you were younger, even to get a few years ago, you could get away with being a flake for a guy. That isn't old anymore. In your age, women expect that if you haven't gotten married or at least engaged, they may be something wrong with you, some hidden defect or deep weakness. You have to start packaging yourself as marriage material. This party is the first step."

"Maybe I don't want to get married."

"Let's not all about what you want. As a woman, I'm telling you that you need to be taken seriously as a man, and the only way for that to happen is the you to package yourself as a potential husband. All you'll see your dream that you wanted, and where are you? What do you have to look forward to?"

"You make me sound like a fucking ball headed for the gutter."

"If you have such a strong desire, how come Nicky has you off to work? I'll tell you why. He knows you won't be in the game for long. Since I've known you, Johnny, women have dumped you at a faster rate than you. You've gone from being dumped by Marlene after three years to being dumped by Nicky after barely six months. It's as if the women you meet come equipped with the latest computer chip, stuffing them to provide the same information about you at faster speeds. After the next upgrade, women will be rejecting you before you say hello. Women don't need to compare notes on you. You're in the collective data bank."

"This may come as news to you, Darlene, but not every woman wants to be a wife. Nicky often said she didn't know if she ever wanted to get married."

"And you believed her? Where have you been for the last 1,000 years? She was using your attitude toward marriage, and what that you said clearly headed in the line column. If you really want to know how women regard matrimony, go to a restaurant and take a look at the hotel registers. They're the biggest, for me registers in the country, packed with nothing but entries on weddings, engagement parties, honeymoon planning, the perfect wedding dress, etc. They're down here, Johnny. There's nothing comparable in the male world."

"I just don't feel the wedding dress. Even the phrase makes me..."

"Makes you what? Jealous, Johnny, if you were any more selfish, you'd reach a complete stop."

"We've never said the you were all that but to get married."

"The younger than you are, and when you mind. It's your unapologetic life style telling me that you're not a man."

Mr. Lonelyhearts

With his long-awaited first novel, The Catfishers, being published this month, JAMES WOLCOTT tells the story of a sensitive young actor's search for love in New York City.
