A World of Water Peter Boomgaard,2007 Water in its many guises has always played a powerful role in shaping Southeast Asian histories cultures societies and economies This volume the rewritten results of an international workshop with participants from 8 countries contains 13 essays representing a broad range of approaches to the study of Southeast Asia with water as the central theme European Newsletter of Southeast Asian Studies ,1994 Narratives of Colonialism G. R. Knight,2000 This book examines the interwoven issues of sugar Java and the Dutch from a broadly post colonial standpoint Sugar s history forms one of the crucial meta narratives of Western colonialism The history of the commodity is integral to that long association between cane sugar and the overseas expansion of the Western powers that had its origins in the Atlantic islands in the fifteenth century From there it spread to the New World and by the nineteenth century into parts of Asia and the Pacific The subsequent threat to cane sugar s pre eminence as a sweetener posed from the mid nineteenth century onward by sugar made from beet only served to further consolidate that connection The colonial metropolitan tie with its promise of protective tariffs and a secure home market became more than ever central to the industry's sustained development. In associated mode colonial states renewed their efforts to subordinate land and labour to sugar's particular requirements. Only in the second half of the twentieth century was the nexus formally broken leaving cane sugar as an often potent legacy of colonialism for the post colonial order. The commercial production of cane sugar in Java dated from the first half of the seventeenth century. It took place there until the early nineteenth century under the patronage of the Dutch East India Company and its successors. The actual business of manufacture largely carried on by Chinese settlers was working in rather varied relationships with Javanese workers and peasant farmers. During the mid nineteenth century decades however the industry was transformed. It became the first of its kind in Asia successfully to adopt the panoply of steam, steel and chemistry which formed the technological basis of industrialised sugar manufacturing.

Raising Cane Donald W. Attwood, D W Attwood, 2019-09-16. Like any book this one is part of a dialogue. Over the years I have asked thousands of questions of myself and others and tried to answer some. Out of all this discussion a written pattern has grown. It is certainly not a definitive pattern. Among those whose words have been woven into it there are many who might have fashioned it better. There are some who would have selected different colors and textures or who might have preferred a totally different pattern. I am conscious of their voices and wish that I could adequately present them all. First and foremost are the voices of farmers and other villagers whose experiences I have tried to understand and represent. A few of them will read this book and decide whether I learned anything from all their patient answers. If they were so inclined they could tell more about the subject than I ever can.
