Sea Floor Topography Of The Central East:

The Geology of the Atlantic Ocean Kenneth O. Emery, Elazar Uchupi, 2012-12-06 The explosion of interest effort and information about the ocean since about 1950 has produced many thousand scientific articles and many hundred books In fact the outpouring has been so large that authors have been unable to read much of what has been published so they have tended to concentrate their own work within smaller and smaller subfields of oceanography Summaries of information published in books have taken two main paths One is the grouping of separately authored chapters into symposia type books with their inevitable overlaps and gaps between chapters The other is production of lightly researched books containing drawings and tables from previous publications with due credit given but showing assembly line writing with little penetration of the unknown Only a few books have combined new and previous data and thoughts into new maps and syntheses that relate the contributions of observed biological chemical geological and physical processes to solve broad problems associated with the shape composition and history of the oceans Such a broad synthesis is the objective of this book in which we tried to bring together many of the pieces of research that were deemed to be of manageable size by their originators The composite may form a sort of plateau above which later studies can rise possibly benefited by our assembly of data in the form of new maps and figures

This book focuses on the survey technology, post processing technology, mapping technology and scientific application of the submarine topography and geomorphology in detail. High resolution submarine geomorphology is a frontier branch of marine geology and marine surveying and mapping which provides a direct basis to study the seabed surface to understand the tectonic movement and submarine evolution. In the past two decades, high resolution submarine geomorphology with high precision multi beam echo sounding, side scan sonar and sub bottom profiler as the major techniques is developing very quickly and is one of the frontiers of international marine science and technology. These high techniques promote the traditional submarine geomorphology to high resolution and quantitative research. At present, high resolution submarine geomorphology is widely used in the delimitation of the continental shelf, the international seabed resources survey, marine engineering and marine military applications. In order to facilitate readers to understand how to acquire and apply scientific research based on submarine topographic data, it highlights the combination of theory, technology and scientific application. This book is useful as a reference for professional and technical personnel in related fields and also as a textbook for both graduate and undergraduate students as well.
