

Reflective Essay
Language, culture, and power

Language is an evolving process that will always continue. Language is how people communicate and is a biological necessity. Since the beginning of the human species, language has been around. It started as just being vocal and over many years became written. Language must change over time to stay current with the times. An example would be a microwave, as it is a fairly new lexis item. Perhaps in the future microwave will no longer be used if it is replaced by better technology. Already some technology is beginning to vanish such as the tape player or cassette. Many words are controversial such as LOL. This word appears to provide little value and many people find it does not belong in the dictionary. However, as words get used more often, they become part of our dictionary even if many disagree. Languages as a whole also appear to have many challenges. With English evolving at such a fast rate, more languages are beginning to vanish. It is important to keep traditional languages preserved, while English continues to become the dominant language.

What makes a piece of language acceptable in the English dictionary? This may be one of the most controversial questions in all of English. English as of late appears to be evolving from teenage girls. Their continuous changes of the use of English have become popular. With texting becoming a world dominated way of communication, teenage girls continue to make new words and change the meanings of current ones. LOL is an example of a word that used to mean laugh out loud. Over time it became just a casual way of communication. However even just recently the term has been become less used. The redundancy of the term may one day become its demise. The same goes for YOLO. This term was quite popular a few years back, but now you rarely see it. Perhaps this term may die. One thing about text language appears to be that it always changes at a rapid rate. Many argue that this text
