

A sepia-toned photograph of a person on a motorcycle and a military vehicle in a dusty street. The person on the motorcycle is in the center, facing away from the camera. To their right is a large, dark, boxy vehicle, possibly a tank or a heavy transport. The street is wide and dusty, with buildings lining both sides. The sky is hazy and yellowish. The overall mood is somber and historical.

Kohler, Mark D. Varien, 2012-04-10 Ancestral Pueblo farmers encountered the deep well watered and productive soils of the central Mesa Verde region of Southwest Colorado around A D 600 and within two centuries built some of the largest villages known up to that time in the U S Southwest But one hundred years later those villages were empty and most people had gone This cycle repeated itself from the mid A D 1000s until 1280 when Puebloan farmers permanently abandoned the entire northern Southwest Taking an interdisciplinary approach this book examines how climate change population size interpersonal conflict resource depression and changing social organization contribute to explaining these dramatic shifts Comparing the simulations from agent based models with the precisely dated archaeological record from this area this text will interest archaeologists working in the Southwest and in Neolithic societies around the world as well as anyone applying modeling

The Ethics of Anthropology and Amerindian Research Richard J. Chacon, Rubén G. Mendoza, 2011-12-15 The decision to publish scholarly findings bearing on the question of Amerindian environmental degradation warfare and or violence is one that weighs heavily on anthropologists This burden stems from the fact that documentation of this may render descendant communities vulnerable to a host of predatory agendas and hostile modern forces Consequently some anthropologists and community advocates alike argue that such culturally and socially sensitive and thereby politically volatile information regarding Amerindian induced environmental degradation and warfare should not be reported This admonition presents a conundrum for anthropologists and other social scientists employed in the academy or who work at the behest of tribal entities This work documents the various ethical dilemmas that confront anthropologists and researchers in general when investigating Amerindian communities The contributions to this volume explore the ramifications of reporting and specifically of non reporting instances of environmental degradation and warfare among Amerindians Collectively the contributions in this volume which extend across the disciplines of archaeology anthropology ethnohistory ethnic studies philosophy and medicine argue that the non reporting of environmental mismanagement and violence in Amerindian communities generally harms not only the field of anthropology but the Amerindian populations themselves

Thoughtful Foragers Steven J. Mithen, 1990-06-29 Thoughtful Foragers is about hunter-gatherer decision making. The author explores the implications of the human mind as a product of biological evolution for the way in which humans solve foraging problems. He draws on studies from ethology, psychology, and ethnography prior to turning his attention to prehistoric hunter-gatherers. He attempts to construct explanations for patterns in the archaeological record by an explicit focus on decision making by individuals. Thoughtful Foragers will appeal to specialists in European prehistory as well as to those interested in archaeological theory and method. It makes some very significant advances which will be of real importance for the field of evolutionary theory in relation to human evolution and the evaluation of human social systems.
