Written for parents of children with multiple impairments, this handbook provides a wealth of ideas to stimulate the development of these children and to involve them in family activities. It is also designed for use by teachers, recreation therapists, school administrators, and others involved in the development or operation of recreation programs for severely impaired children. Included are movement activities, arts and crafts activities, music and listening activities, tactile-sensory activities, and finger games. Materials and adaptive equipment required for the activities are described. The text also presents information on parent and family needs and on developing skills in activities with the handicapped child. Interviews with eight families provide insight and ideas for therapeutic and family recreational activities. A special chapter is included which describes how to develop a community-based recreational program for special needs children.
