Review Key messages Assessment & plan Consultative report

Care summary

The patient is a 48-year-old married female working as an administrative assistant. After decades of having sought psychiatric care previously, it was noticeable to all in the community, family, and friends, the reported symptoms include persistent anxiety, moderate depressive episodes (MDE), sleep disturbances, panic attacks, and occasional episodes of suicidal ideation. She was hospitalized with these issues regarding her personal and professional life. She is particularly concerned about how her anxiety might affect her children, hindering or blocking them from their struggles. Her earlier history of suicide or thoughts of suicide and suicidal feelings highlights her need to be better treated and stability, perhaps circumvented learning to become more healthy in her current life. Her family history reveals chronic struggles, particularly with her mother, which might influence her current mental health challenges. Despite a supportive marriage and healthy family life, she feels lonely at times and worries about finances and health, which are significant sources of concern. Her past medical history includes chronic disease, chronic pain, and persistent alcohol use, which adds to her health problems. The patient is open to learning new strategies to improve her mental health. Demonstrating a willingness to address her complex symptoms, drawing personal experiences and family dynamics, she reports feeling stressed most of the time, get distracted by family life as a caregiver and mother, and experiencing feelings significant source of joy. The job is rewarding, but she sometimes feels overwhelmed by family priorities, exacerbated by the anxiety. Although she has enough resources to meet her needs, financial concerns persist without concrete support. The patient remains aware of complex meanings of many health challenges, family relations, and personal experience for stability and happiness.
