

- What have been your key learning experiences over the duration of the workshop?
- How has your appraisal of theory influenced your original perception of therapy?
- How well do the different approaches fit with your own view of the purpose, process and ethics of counselling and therapy?
- How might your personal preferences enhance or hinder your ability to work with different situations?
- How might you integrate different aspects of the theories and approaches into your practice?

Reflection Week One

It is of my personal belief that no one theory can define a person's actions, thoughts, nor beliefs. Human beings are so complex- they cannot simply be put into categories. I came straight out of my psychology undergrad I was under the impression that every set of symptoms needs to check the boxes of a disorder. This frustrated me. How is it so easy to judge a set of symptoms, label it as a disorder and write off some theory-based therapy that will magically help them? Then the following quote appeared on the screen.

"Each person is an individual. Hence, psychotherapy should be formulated to meet the uniqueness of the individual's needs, rather than tailoring the person to fit the Procrustean bed of a hypothetical theory of human behaviour"

I learnt that every client needs undivided attention to learn about what makes them different – their past, present, aspirations, their coping mechanisms, support networks- and that we never put clients in boxes. Rather, the theoretical framework of assessment, formulation and treatment only guides our direction.

One of the most important notions I took away from this lecture is that it is more important to help the client – rather than come up with theories as to why they behave that way. Theory can be used as a foundation to help people. However, people's individuality remains of utmost importance.

I think I will love this course because it focusses on helping our future clients individually rather than just trying to put people in boxes.
