

stitches
— also known as point

FRENCH KNOT — also known as dot stitch and knotted stitch

French knots are a little tricky, at first and are best worked on a frame, so that both hands have something to steady against the needle. They are used mainly on plain fabric, but also on patterned fabric where they are used to add highlights to solid areas or to define a pattern.

HOLLEN STITCH — also known as double running stitch, stock stitch and Roman stitch Hollen stitch is worked very simply and gives an even, wavy fabric. A row of running stitch is worked first and then the second row of the same stitch. This stitch is used to form a decorative border or to define a pattern on a fabric.

LONG AND SHORT STITCH — also known as plough stitch and shading stitch

Long and short stitch is a variation of satin stitch that gives a gradually shaded effect. It is also used to fill an area which is too large or irregular to be covered neatly by satin stitch and can be worked on plain and even-weave fabrics and on canvas. The first row is made up of alternately long and short stitches which closely follow the outline of the shape to be filled. The subsequent rows are worked in satin stitches of equal length.

SATIN STITCH

Satin stitch appears easy, but some practice is required to work it neatly. The secret lies in making the stitches lie evenly and close together. It can be worked in varying lengths, but very long stitches may become loose and wavy. The stitches can be worked in diagonal, with a change in direction giving the effect of light and shade. Satin stitch can be used on plain and even-weave fabrics and on canvas, as shown in filling.

TENT STITCH — also known as point

Tent stitch is a simple stitch used for fine work. It forms a small diagonal mesh which should always be in the same direction. This mesh covers a flat, fairly smooth surface and continues well with heavier canvas stitches, accentuating their mesh appearance.
