Abstract

The study was focused on the role of leisure and recreation at improving the quality of life of workers in tertiary institutions in Imo State, Nigeria. The study adopted the survey research design where well-structured questionnaire was used for data collection. The questions were based on a four-point rating scale. The instrument was subjected to both face and content validation by three experts guided by the research objectives and hypotheses. The instrument was tested for reliability using Cronbach Alpha Coefficient which produced Alpha Numeric value of 0.85. The area was chosen because there are several institutions in the State. The population of the study was 5,159 and the sample size was 249. Convenience sampling technique was employed with the help of research assistant. Data were computed with the latest SPSS version and analyzed using Mean and Standard Deviation. The benchmark of 2.50 mean was used to accept a given opinion as significant. The hypotheses were tested with t-test at 0.05 level of significance. The study revealed that the major leisure and recreation activities engaged in by workers in tertiary institutions are religious activities, restaurant visits, hobby activities, cooking, and sport activities. The respondents agreed that leisure and recreation activities improve their physical wellness and quality of life. Workers should see leisure and recreation as important and vital tool in organizational settings to be embarked upon, as it plays important role in boosting the quality of life
