generated in a semiconductor laser and a light emitting diode LED have been a field of intense research for more than a decade. This research monograph discusses recent research activities in nonclassical light generation based on semiconductor devices performed mostly at Stanford University. When a semiconductor material is used as the active medium to generate photons as in semiconductor lasers and LEDs, the flow of carriers (electrons and holes) is converted into a flow of photons. Provided that the conversion is fast and efficient, the statistical properties of the carriers (pump noise) can be transferred to the photons; if pump noise can be suppressed to below the shot noise value, the noise in the photon output can also be suppressed below the Poisson limit. Since electrons and holes are fermions and have charges, the statistical properties of these particles can be significantly different from those of photons if the structure of the light emitting device is properly designed to provide interaction between these particles. There has been a discrepancy between the theoretical understanding and experimental observation of noise in a macroscopic resistor until very recently. The dissipation that electrons experience in a resistor is expected to accompany the fluctuation due to partition noise, leading to shot noise in the large dissipation limit, as is the case with photons. Experimental observation shows that thermal noise, expected only in a thermal equilibrium situation (zero bias condition), is the only source of noise featured by a resistor, independent of the current.

Instrumentation in High Energy Physics Fabio Sauli, 1992. This volume contains topical papers covering the various aspects of instrumentation in high energy physics. The subjects of the contributions, all previously unpublished, have been chosen to provide an overview of the fundamental processes and of the technological problems encountered in detecting, tracking, and identifying charged and neutral particles in modern particle physics experiments. Each contribution offers a concise but complete description of the state of the art regarding the subject and is addressed to post-doctoral and research staff readers; it will also be found useful as a teaching aid for students and participants in specialized schools and workshops on intermediate and high energy experimental physics.
