The Australian economy in the 1990s and 2000s

There was high growth in investment and employment in the 2000s. Before the global financial crisis, the Australian economy had experienced "17 consecutive years of economic growth" (OECD, 2010, p. 2). Brown & Davis (2009) discuss that the Australian economy did not experience the severity of the 2008 financial crisis because it had operated under an economic surplus for several years. It had also maintained a positive balance of payment for several years.

Eslake (2006) explains that Australia's unemployment rate went above 11% in 1992. The unemployment rate had been above 3% once since the the1940s went above 4% in the 1970s, 1980s, and 1990s recessions. During the 2008 financial crisis, unemployment increased (see table 1). According to graph 1, it has not gone back to the level it was before the financial crisis.
