My respectful affection deepened as I grew old enough to realize her sorrows and the nobility of her nature and I was always glad after we were separated by the events of 1830 to take every opportunity of letting her know how unalterable my feelings for her were. She broke the ice by being the first to raise her glass to her lips when I had made her my queen and Louis XVIII was the first to exclaim 'The Queen drinks.' A few months later the king was dead and I watched his funeral procession from the windows of the Fire Brigade Station in the Rue de la Paix as it passed on its way to Saint Denis.
