Vowed to Community or Ordained to Mission? Judith Lena Böttcher, 2018-10-01 Lena B ttcher offers an overdue exploration of the early years of the deaconess community in Neuendettelsau from a gender perspective Drawing on rich archival material she focuses on the process of a distinctive collective identity Central to this study is the assumption drawn from the social sciences that collective identity is a social construction which requires the participation of the whole group through identification and which is consolidated by developing specific rituals symbols codes and normative texts which facilitate integration and by constructing external boundaries which separate from the world and the wider church This approach highlights the fact that the women were not merely passive recipients but participated and contributed to the formation of a distinct Neuendettelsau deaconess culture Thus this study offers an explanation for the popularity such institutes enjoyed amongst single and widowed Protestant women in the latter half of the nineteenth century In consequence this study significantly widens the scope of historical research on the Institute which so far has tended to take into account solely the male perspective of the Rektoren

The ^AGospel as Manuscript Chris Keith, 2020-03-20 The written accounts of the Jesus tradition in the Gospels have taken a far superior position in the Christian faith to any oral tradition In The Gospel as Manuscript Chris Keith offers a new material history of the Jesus tradition s journey from voice to page showing that the introduction of manuscripts played an underappreciated but crucial role in the reception history of the Gospel Revealing a vibrant period of competitive development of the Jesus tradition wherein the material status of the tradition frequently played as important a role as the ideas that it contained Keith offers one of the most thorough considerations of the competitive textualization and public reading of the Gospels
