

FrontPage Exercises 1 – Getting Started

About FrontPage

Microsoft FrontPage is a program that is used for creating and editing websites. It is designed to be familiar to users of word processing software such as Microsoft Word. The key difference between a word processor and a website editor is that a word processor works with individual documents. A website editor works with a website which is a collection of documents. Many people make the mistake of using FrontPage the same way they would use a word processor and miss out on some of its best features as a result.

Using the FrontPage Window

When you first open Microsoft FrontPage, you will see a screen similar to the one below:

In the following exercises, you will create a small website about yourself using FrontPage 2002. In the process, you will learn about a lot of FrontPage's most useful features.

Creating a Web

The first thing to do is to create a new web (FrontPage's term for a grouped collection of documents that make up the website). If the task pane is not showing on the right of your screen, go to the File menu and choose New, Page or Web. From the options in the Task pane, click on Empty Web. A dialog box like the one on the following page will appear.
