Cullen, 1987 Roofing research activities in the United States are currently at a minimal level although the roofing industry is a USD7 5 billion industry employing over four million people Since the products of research provide the technical basis for the standards develelopment process it is not surprising that the roofing community has failed in the timely production of standards for the newer materials and in the modernization and updating of standards for the conventional materials The available standards are mostly prescriptive in nature and are deficient in defining the performance to be expected of a material composite and system under actual service conditions This paper reports on the experience of several European countries in conducting research and using the results as a means to produce assessment directives for evaluating and certifying the performance quality of roofing materials and systems The directives are described as to their contents and use In light of the European experiences some research and standards needs of the United States are identified and a direction is presented for consideration NIST Building Science Series ,1989 1987 National Bureau of Standards Authorization United States.
