

Vietnam War: Media And Public Opinion

The media and the military

- The United States military was not allowed to censor or control media reports about the war.
 - It therefore complained that negative media coverage influenced how the American public viewed the war and the efforts of US troops.
- The media played an important role in how Americans viewed the war.
 - It is estimated that 80% of Americans watched television at least once a day in 1970, and 90% of those people watched news programs like 'CBS Evening News' or 'NBC Nightly News'.
 - The media also helped to shape public opinion on key issues like whether or not President Nixon should withdraw troops from Vietnam.
- In 1964, there were only approximately 20 US news reporters in Vietnam. There was not much public interest in the Civil War at this time.
- However, the number of reporters grew rapidly after 1965 because of the decision to send in thousands of US troops.
 - As a consequence, in 1965, there were 400 reporters, and 600 reporters by 1968.
- Most news reporters were stationed in Saigon and reported what the military press office told them about the war's progress.
- Some news reporters went with combat troops on missions and reported what they saw.
 - As a result of this, 40 journalists were killed during the war.

How the media influenced public opinion

- News reporters, who were trained that the government and military hoped to help. For example, the My Lai Massacre and Nixon's secret bombing of Cambodia.
 - These revelations increased mistrust of the US government.
- When the press, or media, learned stories about the war, sending in Cambodia or Laos, large peace demonstrations followed.
 - For example, President Nixon's attack on Cambodia was followed by protests at Kent State University and Jackson State University.
- Aerial reporters and photographs of the conflicts gave powerful messages about the dreadful cost of the war for Americans and Vietnamese alike.
- On 3 November 1969 President Nixon appeared on television to the great majority of Americans to support his vision of Vietnamization.
 - His public support included from 50% to 77% approval.
 - The White House received 30,000 letters and 50,000 telegrams in support.
- Press coverage of anti-war protests encouraged pro-war demonstrations.
 - For example, in May 1970, anti-war demonstration workers were disrupted by students during US Days. They attacked and beat-up students protesting about the Kent State shootings.
- Many Americans argue that protesters reacted to government action in Vietnam, not to media coverage of it.
 - The biggest cause of public discontent was rising US deaths in Vietnam.

Media manipulation

The media and the military during the Vietnam War had a significant impact on public opinion.

They were able to do this by using propaganda, 'news', and other manipulative tactics in order to influence public perception of the war and the American involvement in it.

Some examples of media manipulation during the Vietnam War are misleading headlines, selective reporting, and using images to convey a certain message or idea.

The most influential newspaper during the Vietnam War was 'The New York Times.' The article, 'Lightening of Control,' by Philip Lipman in 1968 showed the shifts in how newspapers were using propaganda to influence public opinion.

By using similar headlines, giving insights into the minds of individuals and presenting images through different frames of reference, they were able to give a certain message. This allowed them to shape public opinion on what was happening in Vietnam.

Journalists played a large role in changing public opinion through strong, bold journalism.

history Although infrequent conflicts involving German states have usually been extensive and often catastrophic constituting turning points for Europe as a whole Absolute War is the first in a series of studies from Mark Hewitson that explore how such conflicts were experienced by soldiers and civilians during wartime and how they were subsequently imagined and understood during peacetime from Clausewitz and Kleist to J nger and Adorno Without such an understanding it is difficult to make sense of the dramatic shifts characterising the politics of Germany and Europe over the past two centuries The studies argue that the ease or reluctance with which Germans went to war and the far reaching consequences of such wars on domestic politics were related to soldiers and civilians attitudes to violence and death as well as to long term transformations in contemporaries conceptualisation of conflict Absolute War reassesses the meaning of military conflict for the millions of German subjects who were directly implicated in the Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars Based on a re reading of contemporary diaries letters memoirs official correspondence press reports pamphlets treatises plays and cartoons this volume refocuses attention on combat and conscription as the central components of new forms of mass warfare It concentrates in particular on the impact of violence killing and death on many soldiers and some civilians experiences and subsequent memories of conflict War has often been conceived of as an act of violence pushed to its utmost bounds as Clausewitz put it but the relationship between military conflicts and violent acts remains a problematic one Public
